The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £26; net income, £401; patron, Marquess of Salisbury; impropiator, J. J. Martin, Esq.: there is a good glebe-house, and nearly 200 acres of land were allotted, at the inclosure, in 1800, in lieu of tithes. A new church, in the later English style, with a campanile turret, was erected in 1832, at an expense of £3282. 8., under an act of the 58th of George III. Cheshunt College, for the instruction and preparation of young men for the ministry, was originally established, in 1768, at Talgarth, in the county of Brecon, South Wales, by the Countess of Huntingdon, who continued to support it until her death in 1791, when it was removed by the trustees to this place, and re-opened on the 24th of August, 1792; a chapel was built in 1806, and in 1821 a new building was annexed, for the accommodation of 20 additional students. The institution is supported by the interest on about £8000 stock, a portion of an estate called Cobham, and subscriptions, the whole producing about £1200 per annum. The free school was founded about 1642, and endowed with land by Robert Dewhurst, who built the school-house, and also assigned 20 nobles each for apprenticing six boys. There are a national school for boys, a school of industry for girls, and the vicarage school, built on the glebe by the vicar, all supported by subscription. Alms-houses for ten widows, at Turner's Hill, are endowed with a donation of £500 from James I., and the income has been augmented by various additional benefactions. To the north were recently some remains of a nunnery, founded in the reign of Stephen, by Peter de Belengey, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, for nuns of the Sempringham order, in which Henry III. afterwards placed others of the Benedictine order: its revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was estimated at £27. 6. 8. Waltham-Cross, a considerable hamlet in the parish, is distinguished by a beautiful stone cross, erected by Edward I., in memory of his queen, Eleanor. Roman coins of the reigns of Adrian, Claudius Gothicus, and Constantine, were found in 1724.

CHESLYN-HAY, an extra-parochial liberty, locally in the parish of CANNOCK, union of PENKRIDGE, E. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 7 miles (S. E. by S.) from Penkridge; containing 774 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 790 acres.

CHESSINGTON, a parish, in the union of EPSOM, Second division of the hundred of CORTHORNE and EFFINGHAM, W. division of SURREY, 3 miles (S.) from Kingston; containing 226 inhabitants. The parish comprises by admeasurement 1223 acres, of which 970 are arable, and about 200 pasture; the soil is chiefly clay. It is annexed to the vicarage of Malden, and the Warden and Fellows of Merton College, Oxford, are impropiators: the tithes have been commuted for £305, and the glebe contains 25 acres. The church is in the early English style. A national school is supported. There is a strong chalybeate spring, called Jessop's Well.

CHESTER, a city, port, and county of itself, locally in the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, of which it is the capital, 17 miles (S.) from Liverpool, 36 (S. W.) from Manchester, and 181 (N. W.) from London, through Coventry and Lichfield, and 190 through Northampton and Leicester; containing 23,115 inhabitants, and, including those portions of the parishes of St. Mary-on-the-Hill, St. Oswald, and the Holy Trinity, which are without the limits of the city, 25,613. The origin of this ancient city has been ascribed to the Cornavii, a British tribe, who, at the time of the Roman invasion, inhabited that part of the island which now includes the counties of Chester, Salop, Stafford, Warwick, and Worcester; and its British name Caer Leon Vawr, "city of Leon the Great," has been referred to Leon, son of Brüt Darian Là, eighth king of Britain. But there is no authentic account of Chester prior to the period when it was made the station of the twentieth Roman legion, after the defeat of Caractacus; and the more respectable historians deduce its names, Caer Leon Vawr, "city" or "camp of the great legion," and Caer Leon ar Dufyr dwy, "the city of the legion on the Dee," from its connexion with that people: it was also called Deunana and Deva, from the same river. The Romans occupied it from the year 46 till their departure from the island in 446, when it reverted to the Britons, from whom it was taken by Ethelfrith, king of Northumbria, who, in 607, defeated them, under the king of Powysland, with great slaughter. But having regained possession of the place, the Britons continued to hold it till 828, when

But having regained possession of the place, the Britons continued to hold it till 828, when Egbert, as sole monarch of England, annexed it to his other possessions. By the Saxons it was called Legan-chester and Legecester. It suffered greatly from the Danes in the ninth century: on their retreat, the walls were repaired by Ethelfreda, Countess of Mercia; and after her death the Britons once more became its masters, but were again driven out by Edward the Elder. In 971-3, Edgar assembled a naval force on the Dee, on which occasion that king, as mentioned by some writers, was rowed from his palace on the southern bank of the river to the conventual church of St. John, by eight tributary kings, he himself taking the helm, to denote his supremacy.

On the division of England between Canute and Edmund Ironside, in 1016, Canute retained possession of Mercia and Northumbria, and Chester, which was included in Mercia, continued to form part of it till the Norman Conquest, when William bestowed it, with the earldom, on his kinsman, Hugh Lupus. At this time, according to Domesday book, the city contained 431 rateable houses. For more than two centuries after the Conquest, it was the head-quarters of the troops employed to defend the English border against the incur-sive attacks of the Welsh; and, on account of its importance as a military station, was, during that period, more or less favoured by the reigning monarchs. In the war between Henry III. and the barons, Chester was captured by the Earl of Derby, in the year 1264, and held for the crown till the battle of Evesham, in which the barons were defeated with the loss of their leader, and an end put to the contest. On the subjugation of Wales, in the year 1300, by Edward I., several of the Welsh chieftains did homage to his son, Edward of Carnarvon, then an infant, in Chester castle. Richard II., by an act of parliament, which was rescinded by his successor, erected the earldom of Chester into a principality, to be held only by the king's eldest son.

The city, in common with the whole county, suffered considerably from the sanguinary conflicts between the houses of York and Lancaster, during which it was visited by Margaret of Anjou. In 1554, the inhabitants experienced the severity of the persecution by which the reign of Mary was distinguished; and the martyrdom of George Marsh, a clergyman, who was burnt for preaching the tenets of Protestantism, was rendered memorable by an attempt of one of the sheriffs to rescue him, which was defeated by the other. In 1634, the city suffered dreadfully from the plague; during its continuance the court of exchequer was removed to Tarvin, and the court of assize to Nantwich, and the fairs were suspended. In the memorable siege of the city by Sir William Brereton, in 1645, when the garrison was commanded by Lord Byron, the inhabitants experienced great privations for their adherence to the cause of Charles I., who had the mortification to witness, from the Phoenix tower and the great tower of the cathedral, the entire defeat of his army under Sir Marmaduke Langdale, and its pursuit by the enemy even to the very walls; the noble commander, after a gallant resistance, surrendered on honourable terms, Feb. 3rd, 1646. In 1659, Sir George Booth surprised and took possession of the city, but it was soon surrendered to the parliamentary forces under General Lambert. In 1688, the Roman Catholic lords, Molyneux and Aston, raised a force, and made themselves masters of Chester, and James II.; but his abdication rendered further efforts useless. Under William III. it was chosen one of the six cities for the residence of an assay-master, and allowed to issue silver coinage. In the rebellion of 1745, it was fortified against the Pretender, the last military event of importance recorded of a place celebrated as the rendezvous of troops from the earliest times.

Situated on a rocky elevation, on the northern bank of the Dee, and half encircled by a fine sweep of the river, the appearance of CHESTER is remarkable and picturesque. The city is entirely surrounded by a wall, and comprises four principal streets, diverging at right angles from a common centre, and extending towards the cardinal points; at the extremity of each is a gate, after which are respectively named Eastgate-street, Northgate-street, Bridgegate-street, and Watergate-street: this plan, strictly conformable to the Roman style of building, affords strong presumptive evidence of its Roman origin. Within the liberty of the city is an extensive southern suburb, called Hanbridge, which in feudal times generally fell a prey to the predatory incursions of the Welsh, and thence obtained, in their language, the appellation of Treboeth, "the burnt town." The streets, being cut out of the rock, are several feet below the general surface, a circumstance that has led to a singular construction of the houses. Level with the streets are low shops, or warehouses, over which is an open balustraded gallery, with steps at convenient distances into the streets; and along the galleries, or, as they are called by the inhabitants, "rows," are houses with shops: the upper stories are erected over the row, which, consequently, appears to be formed through the first floor of each house, and at the intersection of the streets are additional flights of steps. The rows in Bridge and Eastgate streets, running through the principal part of the city, are much frequented as promenades. Pennant considered them to be remnants of the ancient vestibules of the Roman houses; but other writers are of opinion that they were originally constructed for defence, especially against the sudden inroads of the Welsh. The fronts of such of them as have not been modernised are bounded by a heavy wooden railing; and immense pillars of oak, supporting transverse beams, sustain the weight of the upper stories. Many of the houses in Bridge and Eastgate streets, having been rebuilt, are considerably improved and enlarged, and their appearance rendered light by iron-railing. The streets, which are well lighted with gas, are indifferently paved, but the inconvenience to foot passengers, to whom the rows afford a sheltered walk, is little felt; the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with water, and the city, both within and without the walls, has been much improved of late by the addition of well-built houses. The new bridge, consisting of one arch of 200 feet in the span, is constructed of Peckforton stone, with quoins of granite, at an expense of £50,000, from a design by Mr. Thomas Harrison: the old bridge, consisting of seven arches, has, within the last few years, been considerably widened and improved. Fine views of the city, the peninsula of Wirral, the Welsh hills, and the estuary of the Dee, are obtained from the walls, which afford a delightful and favourite promenade. There are two public libraries: the theatre, a small neat edifice, is open during the races, and generally throughout the summer; and grand musical meetings are held at distant periods. The races, which attract much company from Wales and the neighbouring counties, commence on the first Monday in May, and terminate on the Friday following; they take place on the Rood-eye, a fine level beneath the city walls, well adapted to the purpose.

The port is not of much importance, owing to the shallowness of the water; but, by the exertions of the River Dee Company, the channel has been deepened, the navigation improved, and a tract of ground, formerly sands, but now arable land, has been gained, by altering the course of the river, and making embankments, the last of which was completed in 1824. The commerce, both domestic and foreign, was once somewhat extensive, but is now chiefly confined to Ireland, though a few ships trade with the Baltic, Spain, Portugal, and the Mediterranean shores. The articles imported are, linen, butter, provisions, timber, hides, tallow, feathers, iron, hemp, flax, kid and lamb skins, fruit, oil, barilla, and wine; those shipped, chiefly coastwise, are, cheese (in large quantities), coal, lead, copper, calamine, and lead, copper, and iron ores. About 1736, Chester became a great mart for Irish linen, which trade increased so much, that the fairs were principally distinguished by the quantity sold annually at them, estimated at 4,000,000 yards. The manufactures are inconsiderable; the principal articles are tobacco, snuff, white-lead, shot, tobacco-pipes, and leather. The skin trade was formerly extensive; but is now extinct; and the manufacture of gloves, in which several hundred persons were employed, has much declined. The city mills, standing on the western side of the old bridge, are complete and extensive; they were erected a few years since, the previous buildings having been burnt down, and formerly were a source of considerable profit to the earls of Chester, the inhabitants not being permitted to grind their corn elsewhere. Chester is connected with Liverpool by the Ellesmere canal, which commences at Ellesmere Port, on the Mersey, and here joins the Dee and the Chester canal. The Chester and Crewe railway diverges from the Grand Junction railway, a little to the north of Crewe, and proceeds in a west-north-western direction towards Chester, after reaching which, it is connected with the Chester and Birkenhead line, at its terminal station in Brook-street; it was opened in Oct. 1840, and during that year the company was united to that of the Grand Junction railway, of which the Chester and Crewe railway is now become a branch. The Chester and Birkenhead line commences at the station in Brook-street, Chester, and runs, north-north-west, to Birkenhead; it was opened for passengers and general traffic, in Sept. 1840, and is $14\frac{1}{2}$ miles long. The market-days are Wednesday and Saturday: the new market-place, comprising five distinct buildings, was erected at the expense of the corporation, in 1828. The fairs are on the last Thursday in February, for horses and cattle; and July 5th and October 10th, for articles in general, of which Irish linen, Manchester goods, Welsh flannel, and Birmingham and Sheffield wares, are the principal. The two latter fairs were granted by Norman earls; and their antiquity is proved by the recorded jurisdiction of the Dutton family over the Cheshire minstrels, which is said to have originated in the deliverance of Earl Ranulph de Blundeville from a body of Welsh invaders, by a band of minstrels and buffoons, under the command of Hugh Dutton, who had assembled at Chester fair; for which service Dutton was afterwards allowed to license minstrels and other itinerants, without their being accounted vagabonds. Fourteen days before the commencement of each general fair, a wooden hand, as the emblem of traffic and bargain, used to be suspended from the Pentice, adjoining St. Peter's church, where it remained during the fair, a period of twenty-nine days, when non-freemen were allowed to trade in the city. Besides these fairs, there are others for the sale of live stock, held on the last Thursday in April, the first Thursday in Sept., the last Thursday in Nov., and for the sale of cheese and other agricultural produce, on the days preceding all the fairs. The Linen Hall, built about the year 1780, is a spacious pile of building, forming an oblong square, and comprises more than one hundred shops.

Corporation Seal.

The city is one of the most ancient CORPORATE TOWNS in England. At the Conquest, it ranked as a Gilda Mercatoris, a constitution somewhat similar to that of modern municipal corporations; it was chartered by its Norman earls, and additional immunities were conferred on the inhabitants by charter of King John. Edward III. granted to the corporation all the vacant lands within the liberty of the city; and Richard II. authorised the mayor, sheriffs, and commonalty, to hold courts of common law and other courts, which privileges were confirmed and extended by Henry IV. and VI. Henry VII., besides granting a more extensive charter, remitted four-fifths of the fee-farm rent of £100 per annum, which Henry III. and Edward I. had claimed from the citizens in consideration of continuing their privileges, and constituted the city a county of itself, under the style of the "City and County of the City of Chester." Charles II. disfranchised it in 1684-5; but its liberties were afterwards restored, with a discretionary power in the crown to displace the officers of the corporation. James II., availing himself of this prerogative, displaced the mayor, recorder, and other functionaries, but was induced, at the approach of the Revolution, to restore them to office. By the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, the government is vested in a mayor, 10 aldermen, and 30 councillors; the council appoint a sheriff; and the city, formerly in 12 wards, is by that act divided into 5 only; the number of magistrates is 15. No less than 24 guilds or trade companies, headed by aldermen, or wardens, hold charters of incorporation under the city seal. The freedom of the city is inherited by all the sons of freemen, and acquired by servitude and birth. On the abridgment of the privileges of the county palatine, in 1541, an act was passed, empowering the county to return two knights, and the city two burgesses, to parliament: the election for the city was formerly vested in the mayor, aldermen, and common-councilmen, whether resident or not, and freemen resident in the city a year preceding, in number about 1300; but by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, it was extended to the £10 householders; and the limits of the borough, which anciently comprised 3000 acres, have been enlarged, so as, for electoral purposes, to include part of the township of Great Boughton, and comprehend 3080 acres. The sheriff is returning officer. By ancient usage, confirmed by the several charters, the mayor, assisted by the recorder, held crown-mote and port-mote courts: the earliest rolls in these courts are of the date 1277: the jurisdiction of the crown-mote extends to all crimes except that of high treason, the mayor having had power to pass sentence of death, and order execution, independently of the crown; and in the port-mote pleas to any amount are cognizable. The recorder is now the sole judge in these courts, since the passing of the Municipal Corporations' act. There are also two ancient courts, one called the "Pentice court," which has cognizance of personal actions to any amount; and the other the "Port-mote court," held before the mayor, to which records are removable from the Pentice court, by command of the mayor without writ. The courts of quarter-sessions are held in the exchange, where the town officers and the members for the city are elected; and the assizes for the county are held in the castle. The exchange is a handsome brick building, finished in 1698; it is fronted with stone, supported by columns, and surmounted by a glazed cupola. On the ground-floor are the record-room and shops; and on the first floor the council and assembly rooms, which are decorated with a picture of George III. by Joshua Reynolds, and handsome portraits of members of the Grosvenor, Cholmondeley, Bunbury, and Egerton families, and of several charitable individuals. The city gaol contains twelve wards, day-rooms, and airing-yards, and eight work-rooms. Chester is the principal place of election for the southern division of the county.

Of the ancient CASTLE, built by the Conqueror, there remains only a large square tower, called "Julius Agricola's Tower," now used as a magazine for gunpowder. Though of modern appearance, having recently been newly fronted, it is undoubtedly of great antiquity, and interesting as the probable place of confinement of the Earl of Derby; and in which Richard II., and Margaret, Countess of Richmond, were imprisoned. In the second chamber James II. heard mass, on his tour through this part of the kingdom, a short time previously to the Revolution. This apartment, when opened after many years of disuse as a chapel, exhibited, from the richness of its decorations, a splendid appearance, the walls being completely covered with paintings in fresco, as vivid and beautiful as when executed; and the roof, from the rich effect produced by the ribs of the groined arches, springing elegantly from slender pillars, with capitals in a chaste and curious style, was equally striking. The remainder of the original structure, which was pulled down in 1790, contained a room termed Hugh Lupus' Hall, that was regarded as a superb specimen of baronial magnificence. The new edifice, which has excited general admiration, was erected from a design by Mr. Harrison, and under his inspection: the principal entrance is of the Doric order, resembling the Acropolis at Athens. Opposite to the great gate is the shire-hall, a magnificent structure: on the right of the hall is the entrance to the gaol, which is appropriated to debtors and felons of the county. At the eastern side of the yard are barracks, fronted with white freestone, and ornamented with Ionic pillars, and capable of lodging 120 men; on the western side is a corresponding building, used as an armoury, which will contain 30,000 stand of arms. The castle is a royal fortress: the establishment consists of a governor, lieutenant-governor, ordnance-keeper, and barrack-master. The constableness of the tower is held by patent, and is free from municipal controul.

Arms of the Bishopric.

Chester, with part of the kingdom of Mercia, at an early period gave name to a DIOCESE, which afterwards was incorporated with that of Lichfield. In 1075, Peter, Bishop of Lichfield, restored the see to Chester, whence it was a second time removed to Lichfield, by his successor, Robert de Lindsey. It again became a diocese under Henry VIII., who named it one of the six new sees created in 1541, and endowed it with a portion of the possessions of the abbey of St. Werburgh, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £1073. 17. 7. The first bishop was John Bird, previously a provincial of the Carmelites, and Bishop of Bangor, who, in 1547, granted the manors and demesnes of the bishopric to the king, accepting impropriations of little value in exchange, and thus rendered it one of the least valuable of the English sees. Its temporalities in Chester consist only of the palace, which was rebuilt in 1752, by Bishop Keene, and its appendages, and two houses near St. John's church. The act of the 6th and 7th of William IV., cap. 77, provides that the diocese shall consist of the county of Chester, so much of the county of Flint as is now within it, and that part of Shropshire not in the diocese of Hereford. The jurisdiction of the bishop extends over 573 benefices; he has the patronage of the five canonries, which are to be reduced to four; and of the archdeaconry, chancellorship, and thirty-five benefices, with an income of £3250. The Dean and Chapter have the patronage of the five minor canonries, and eleven benefices, with a net revenue of £630: the proceeds of one canonry have been transferred to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The minor canons compose a corporation, and have a revenue derived from the produce of land. The CATHEDRAL, originally the conventual church of St. Werburgh, was first dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, but subsequently placed by Ethelfreda under the patronage of the Saxon saint Walmgha, daughter of Wulphen, King of Mercia: that princess, and Leofric, Earl of Mercia, were great benefactors to the church, as well as Hugh Lupus, who substituted Benedictine monks for Secular canons. On the suppression of the abbey, a dean, six prebendaries, and six minor canons, were appointed in lieu of the abbot and monks, the last abbot being made dean: there are also a chancellor, registrar, sacrist, and precentor. At the Dissolution the cathedral was dedicated to Christ and the Blessed Virgin. It stands on the eastern side of Northgate-street, and, exclusively of some interesting remains of the abbey, the present building was erected in the reigns of Henry VII. and Henry VIII. With the exception of the western end, it is, externally, a heavy irregular pile: the tower in the centre, originally intended to sustain a spire, is supported by massive piers, and is in the later style of English architecture. Of late years, the exterior, which, from the soft nature of the stone, was greatly dilapidated, has undergone considerable repairs. The interior is elegant and impressive, and exhibits portions in the Norman and in the early and decorated styles of English architecture. The piers of the nave are in the decorated style, with flowered capitals; and the clerestory, which is in the later style, has a fine range of painted windows. To the east of the north transept are some chapels in the early English style; the south transept, which is larger than the north, and consists of a centre and two side aisles, is in the decorated style, and, being separated from the cathedral by a wooden screen, forms the parish church of St. Oswald. The choir has a chequered floor of black and white marble, and the stalls are adorned with light tabernacle work skilfully executed; the bishop's throne, usually deemed Werburgh's shrine, is a beautiful specimen of workmanship, in the style of the early part of the fourteenth century. The chapter-house, an admirable relic of antiquity, in the early English style, stands in the eastern walk of the cloister; it was built by Earl Randolph the first, and became the burial-place of the earls of the original Norman line, except Richard, who perished by shipwreck. Under part of the prebendal houses is a fine Norman crypt, in good preservation, which supported the great hall of the monastery, and had lain concealed till it was cleared out and rendered accessible by order of Dr. Blomfield, the present Bishop of London, who then presided over this see.

The city comprises the PARISHES of St. Bridget, containing 675 inhabitants; St. John the Baptist, 6752; Little St. John, extra-parochial; St. Martin, 532; St. Michael, 649; St. Olave, 430; and St. Peter, 847; and part of the parishes of St. Mary-on-the-Hill, 2975; St. Oswald, 5959; and the Holy Trinity, 3340; and the precinct of the Cathedral Close, 329. The living of St. Bridget's is a rectory not in charge; net income, £75, patron, the Bishop. The church, lately rebuilt, is a chaste and elegant structure, in the Grecian style, and of the Doric order; towards its erection the Bridge Committee gave £4000, and the parishioners £500. The living of St. John the Baptist's is a vicarage not in charge; net income, £237; patron and improprator, Marquess of Westminster. The church, formerly collegiate, and, on the removal of the see of Lichfield to Chester by Bishop Peter, used as the cathedral, consists of the nave and portions of the transepts of the ancient cruciform structure, of which the eastern part has been long since destroyed: the nave has massive Norman piers, with a triforium and clerestory of the early English character; the north porch, in the same style, is very beautiful; and the tower, a fine composition, though greatly mutilated, is detached from the church by the shortening of the western part of the nave. The living of Little St. John's is a perpetual curacy; net income, £164; patrons, Mayor and Corporation, who, by the Municipal Corporations' Act, were directed to dispose of the advowson. The living of St. Martin's is a rectory not in charge; net income, £80; patron, the Bishop. The living of St. Michael's is a perpetual curacy; net income, £84; patron, the Bishop. The living of St. Olave's is a perpetual curacy; net income, £89; patron, the Bishop. The living of St. Peter's is a discharged perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £120; patron, the Bishop. The living of the parish of St. Mary-on-the-Hill is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £52, and in the gift of the Marquess of Westminster: the tithes have been commuted for £140. The church is a venerable building, in the later style of English architecture. The living of St. Oswald's is a discharged vicarage, with Churton Heath annexed, valued in the king's books at £8. 18. 4.; net income, £245; patrons, the Dean and Chapter. The parochial church is formed of the south transept of the cathedral. The living of the parish of the Holy Trinity is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 15. 6.; net income, £290; patron, Earl of Derby: the tithes have been commuted for £70. An additional church, dedicated to St. Paul, has been erected, of which the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £60; patron, Vicar of St. John's. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, the Connexion of the Countess of Huntingdon, Independents, Welsh and Wesleyan Methodists, New Connexion of Methodists, Sandemanians, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics.

The Free Grammar school was founded by Henry VIII. who, in the 36th year of his reign, endowed it with a rent-charge of £108. 16., for two masters and twenty-four boys, from amongst whom the choristers of the cathedral are chosen: it has an exhibition for a scholar at one of the Universities. The schoolroom, originally the refectory of the monastery, is a fine specimen of the early English style, but retaining little of the ancient edifice, except a stone pulpit, and a staircase in good preservation. The Blue-coat school was founded in 1700, on the recommendation of Bishop Stratford, and endowed for the maintenance of thirty-five boys: it is supported by the interest of money arising from benefactions, legacies, and surpluses of musical festivals, rents of land, and annual subscriptions. In 1781, the revenue being augmented, a plan was adopted for educating 120 day scholars in addition; hence the origin of the Green-coat school. A similar school for girls was established in 1718, to which, in 1793, Mary Tilley bequeathed £400, paid in 1815. In 1811, the Marquess of Westminster founded a school for boys, and the Marchioness a school for girls; the rooms form a handsome building near St. John's church. There are two Diocesan schools, one of which, the Diocesan central school, was instituted in 1812, under the patronage of Bishop Law; also a day school supported by endowment, and various infants' and Sunday schools maintained by subscription.

St. John's Hospital, a very ancient institution, founded probably before the reign of Henry III., was demolished during the siege of Chester, but was rebuilt in the reign of Charles II., and its revenues were conferred by charter on the corporation, in trust for the poor in the hospital; the same charter also included the revenues of St. Giles's Hospital in Spital Broughton. In consequence of extreme neglect and misapplication, the property belonging to this charity has been greatly reduced. The buildings, which now occupy the site of St. John's Hospital, form, towards the front, three sides of a quadrangle, separated from North-street by iron-railings; the south wing is used for a chapel, the Blue-coat school occupies the centre, and the remaining wing contains the master's house, at the back of which is an inclosed yard, whereof one side contains six dwellings for poor women, who represent the sisterhood of the hospital. Six almshouses were founded by Sir Thomas Smith in the reign of Henry VII., and are inhabited by widows of freemen; four were founded by Robert Fletcher, in 1674, for widows; and almshouses, containing 16 rooms, in St. John's-lane, are tenanted by as many poor women. In 1658, William Jones, Esq., of the Middle Temple, granted buildings containing 10 rooms, and endowed them for six poor women and four men above 55 years of age; the houses are situated in Pepper-street, and the income amounts to £67. 16. per annum. There are various endowments and bequests belonging to dissenters of the Presbyterian denominations, among which are almshouses for four women, in Trinity-lane, erected and endowed by property bequeathed by Mrs. Jane Dean, in 1729. The house of industry, built in 1751, is pleasantly situated near the Rood-eye. The general infirmary, a well-built commodious structure, on the western side of the city, originated in 1756, from a bequest of £300 by Dr. John Stratford, and its expenditure is now nearly £3000 per annum: the establishment of fever wards was proposed in 1774, and a few years afterwards carried into execution, chiefly through the exertions of Dr. Haygarth. There is also a lying-in institution, supported by subscription; and a county asylum for lunatics, capable of accommodating 96 patients, has lately been erected on the Liverpool road, from a design by Mr. William Cole, jun., at a cost of £25,125. 14.

The Walls of Chester rank amongst its principal ANTIQUITIES, and are the only specimen of this species of ancient fortification in Britain remaining entire; they comprise a circuit of nearly two miles, and, in the narrowest parts, are sufficiently wide for two persons to walk abreast. Of the small towers, or turrets, erected within bow-shot of each other, only the Phoenix and Water towers exist: to keep them in repair, a small murage duty was granted by Edward I. on all merchandise brought to the town by sea, but this revenue is not now very productive, in consequence of the principal articles of commerce being landed at Liverpool, and conveyed hither by canal; the corporation, however, continue the repairs. Besides the city gates before enumerated, which, in comparison with the walls, are modern erections, there is a fifth, or postern, between East gate and Bridge gate, called New gate. The military importance of the city rendered the custody of four of the gates for centuries an honourable and lucrative office; it was held successively by the Earls of Shrewsbury, Oxford, and Derby, and Lord Crewe, and that of the fifth by one of the magistrates for the city. The custody of Water gate, connected with the office of issuing process for offences committed on the Dee, was sold, in 1778, by the Earl of Derby, to the corporation. Among the ancient Religious Establishments may be noticed the monastery, or abbey, of St. John the Baptist, founded in 906, by Ethelred, Earl of Mercia, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £88. 16. 8., and the remains of which constitute the parish church of St. John; the monastery of St. Mary, of uncertain foundation; for Benedictine nuns, mentioned in Domesday book, the revenue of which was £99. 16. 2.; the monastery of St. Michael, of which mention occurs in the charter of Roger, constable of Chester, and also in the reign of Henry II.; a house of Grey friars, in the parish of the Holy Trinity, probably founded by Henry III.; a house of Carmelites; and another of Black friars, in the parish of St. Martin; and, without the North gate, the hospital of St. John, which had a sanctuary and extensive privileges, and the revenue of which was £28. 10. In the neighbourhood of the castle were formerly numerous Roman antiquities, particularly at Nensfield, where remains of a tessellated pavement have been discovered. The esplanade, when cleared of the ancient parts of the castle, was given by government to the county, for the erection of the splendid public buildings which now ornament the site; but the right of establishing a fortification, whenever necessary, was reserved for the crown. The eastern wall is built over part of a Roman wall; but a segment of the wall is left outside the esplanade, for the purpose of clearing it. In a cellar belonging to the Feathers hotel is a Roman hypocaust, in a remarkably perfect state; and in a close at the southern end of the bridge, termed Edgar's field, the supposed site of Edgar's palace, and adjoining a cavity in a rock, is a stone figure of the goddess Pallas, a relief alluded to by ancient writers. Remains of Roman altars, with figures and inscriptions, have also at different times been discovered. Randle Higden, Roger of Chester, and Bradshaw, mention subterraneous passages under the city; one of these was discovered about the commencement of the present century, extending in a south-eastern direction from the ruins of the abbey, but it was soon closed up. On taking down an old house lately in Eastgate-street, a silver coin of Titus was found among the rubbish, and while digging for the foundation of the new building, a pavement was discovered about eight feet below the present road, giving authority to the prevalent opinion that the level of the city was formerly the same as that of the ancient cathedral, the descent to which is now made by several steps.

This ancient city has been the birthplace of several eminent men, the most distinguished of whom were, four antiquaries of the same family, all named Randle Holme; Dr. William Cowper, who made collections for a history of Chester; and the celebrated mathematicians, Edward Brerewood and Samuel Molyneux, the latter a friend and correspondent of Locke. In the church of the Holy Trinity were interred, Matthew Henry, the commentator on the Bible, and a pastor in the city from 1687 to 1713, to whose memory a brass tablet has been placed over the communion table; and Parnell, the poet, Oct. 24th, 1718. Chester gives the title of Earl to the Prince of Wales, eldest son of the sovereign.

CHESTER-LE-STREET (St. MARY AND St. CUTHBERT), a parish, and the head of a union (though a portion of the parish is in the union of LANCHESTER,) partly in the N. division of EASINGTON ward, but chiefly in the Middle division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM; comprising the chapelries of Birtley, Lamesley, Pelton, and Tanfield, and the townships of Chester, Edmondsley, Harraton, Hedley, Kibblesworth, Lambton, Great and Little Lumley, Ouston, Plawsworth, Ravensworth, Urpeth, and Waldrige; and containing 16,359 inhabitants, of whom 2599 are in the township of Chester, 6 miles (N.) from Durham. This place occupies the site of the Roman station Condercum, and was called by the Saxons Coneceaster, from which its present appellation is derived, as is its adjunct from its position on the line of the Roman military way to Newcastle: several Roman coins (especially a Gordian in gold, in the possession of the family of the late Mr. Surtees, of Mainsforth) and an altar much defaced, have been found; and specimens of antiquity are still frequently turned up. It was made the head of the ancient see of Lindisfarne by Eardulph, eighteenth prelate, who, in 882, removed hither the relics of St. Cuthbert, and founded a church, which continued under a succession of eight bishops to be the cathedral of the diocese, till the removal of the see, in 995, to the city of Durham. From this period the church became parochial, and, in 1286, Bishop Anthony Beck founded in it a collegiate establishment, consisting of a dean, seven prebendaries, three deacons, and other members, which establishment remained till the Dissolution, when the dean's portion of its revenue was estimated at £77. 11. 8.

The parish comprises by measurement 23,852 acres, of which 2619 are in the township, where the soil is light and variable, and the scenery rich and beautiful; the neighbourhood abounds with coal, and there are some freestone quarries. The town, which extends nearly a mile in length, is situated in a valley, on the western side of the Wear, and on the road to Newcastle; a more irregular line of buildings runs east and west, at right angles with the former: in 1771 it suffered materially from an inundation of the river, which greatly damaged many of the houses and destroyed considerable property. A bridge was built over the Cone, or Cong, also called Chester brook, a branch of the Wear, in 1821; and a mechanics' institute was established in 1825. Here are a large brewery, a tannery, a foundry and engine-building works employing about 125 hands, and manufactories for ropes, nails, and tiles; and cannon were formerly cast in a foundry commenced about the close of the last century. A market, which was held weekly, has been discontinued; a court leet is holden twice in the year by the Bishop of Durham, as lord of the manor, at which small debts are recoverable; and the petty-sessions for Chester ward, for which a coroner is specially appointed, are held every alternate Thursday. It is a polling-place for the northern division of the county. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift, alternately, of Lady Byron and the Joliffe family, with a net income of £377: the patrons are the impropiators. The church is partly in the early and partly in the later English style, with an enriched tower, square at the base and octangular in the second stage, and surmounted by a finely-proportioned spire, 156 feet high, considered to be the handsomest in the North of England: in the north aisle is an interesting series of fourteen altartombs, with recumbent effigies of the family of Lumley, of Lumley Castle from the time of the Conquest to the sixteenth century, the greater part of them set up by John, Lord Lumley, in the reign of Elizabeth. There are churches at Lamesley, Tanfield, and Pelton; and in the parish are places of worship for Independents, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans. A national school was established in 1842. Mrs. Elizabeth Tewart, in 1718, left rent-charges of £6 for the instruction of children, £3 for apprenticing a boy, and £5. 4.; which is distributed to the poor in bread; Henry Smith, in 1641, left property now averaging £14. 10. yearly, General Lambton £8 yearly, and Ralph Harrison, in 1748, a sum of money producing £12 per annum, for charitable purposes. The poor law union, of which this place is the head, comprises 20 parishes or places, and contains a population of 18,357.

CHESTER, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of ST. ALKMUND, and union of DERBY, but without the limits of that borough, in the hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY; containing 364 inhabitants. It is situated on the eastern bank of the Derwent, about one mile north-north-east from the town, and occupies the site of the Roman station Derventio, the most important in the county, which was of an oblong form, and comprised nearly six acres. The wall that surrounded it was traced by Dr. Stukeley, in the year 1721; but subsequent cultivation has removed every vestige. It stood on the line of the Ikeneld-street, which here crossed the river; and is noticed in Domesday book under the name of Cestre, being therein described as parcel of the ancient demesne of the crown. Numerous foundations, coins of gold, silver, and copper, and other remains of Roman antiquity have been discovered.

CHESTERBLADE, a chapelry, in the parish of EVERCREECH, forming, with the remainder of that parish, and the parish of West Cranmore, a detached portion of the hundred of WELLS-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Shepton-Mallet; containing 57 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. There are vestiges of a Roman encampment on a small hill in the vicinity.

CHESTERFIELD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY; comprising the incorporated market-town of Chesterfield, which has a separate jurisdiction; the chapelry of Brimington, and the townships of Calow, Hasland, Newbold with Dunstan, Tupton, Temple-Normanton, and Walton; and containing 11,231 inhabitants, of whom 6212 are in the town, 24 miles (N. by E.) from Derby, and 151 (N. N. W.) from London, on the road to Leeds. This place, from its Saxon name Ceaster, appears to have been a Roman station; its Roman name is said to have been Lutudarum; and there is reason to suppose that in Roman times it was an emporium of the mining districts of Derbyshire. At the time of the Norman survey it was called Cestrefeld, and was only a bailiwick to Newbold, the latter being now a small hamlet in the parish; but within a century from that period, it seems to have risen into such importance as to have obtained from King John, who conferred it upon William de Briwere, a charter of incorporation, with a privilege of two markets and a fair. In the reign of Henry III., a decisive battle was fought here between Henry, nephew of that monarch, and the barons, which terminated in the defeat of the latter, several of whom were slain; and Robert de Ferrars, Earl of Derby, who had espoused their cause, being taken prisoner, was sent in chains to Windsor, and afterwards, by act of parliament, degraded from his honours and deprived of his estates. During the parliamentary war, another conflict took place, between the royalists, under the command of the Earl of Newcastle, and the parliamentarians, in which the former obtained a signal victory.

The town is situated on an eminence, and the borough is bounded on the south and south-west by the Hipper, and on the east by the Rother, which at this place are inconsiderable streams; the houses are of brick, roofed with stone; the streets are indifferently paved, but well lighted with gas, by an act of parliament, obtained in 1825, and are plentifully supplied with water. There are a subscription library and a theatre; and races take place in autumn. An agricultural society has been established within the last few years, the members of which hold their meetings alternately at Chesterfield and Bakewell, generally in October. Several of the inhabitants are engaged in tambour work, and the manufacture of bobbin-net lace and hosiery; there is a silk-mill in the town, and in the neighbouring village of Little Brampton a cotton-wick mill, called the bump-mill, and a small-ware manufactory. In the vicinity are some productive mines of iron-stone and coal, and some foundries; and there are several potteries, chiefly for coarse brown and yellow stone ware, which afford employment to upwards of 200 men. The Chesterfield canal, communicating with the Trent and the Humber, was completed, in 1777, at an expense of £160,000: the North-Midland, or Leeds and Derby, railway passes by the town, a little to the east of which is an intermediate station. The market is on Saturday: fairs, principally for cattle, are held on Jan. 27th, Feb. 28th, the first Saturday in April, May 4th, July 4th, Sept. 25th, and Nov. 25th, the last being toll-free; those in May and September, at the latter of which a great quantity of cheese is sold, are attended by the clothiers from Yorkshire. The GOVERNMENT, by charter of incorporation, granted by King John, ratified by succeeding monarchs, enlarged by Queen Elizabeth, and confirmed by Charles II., was vested in a mayor, six aldermen, six brothers, and twelve capital burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk, chamberlain, two meat inspectors, and a serjeant-at-mace. The corporation now consists of a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, under the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76: the limits of the borough are co-extensive with the township of Chesterfield. The mayor for the time being, and for the previous year, are justices of the peace ex officio; and there are two others. The petty-sessions for the division are held here; and a court of record, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £20, is held under the lord of the manor, by letters-patent granted by King John to William de Briwere, and confirmed by Charles I., in the seventh year of his reign, to William, Earl of Newcastle, and Sir Charles Cavendish, then lords of the manor; the jurisdiction extends over the hundred of Scarsdale, eight miles round Chesterfield. A court of requests was established for the recovery of small debts within the parish, by an act passed in 1839. The town-hall, standing in the market-place, was built in 1790; on the ground-floor is a prison for debtors. There is also a house of correction, under the superintendance of the county magistrates.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15. 0. 2½.; net income, £204; patron and appropriator, Dean of Lincoln. The church is a spacious cruciform structure, principally in the decorated, but partly in the early, and partly in the later, style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower rising from the intersection, and surmounted by a grooved or channelled spire of wood covered with lead: the clerestory windows of the nave, and the east window of the chancel, are fine compositions in the later style; and in the south transept are a beautiful screen and rood-loft: there are also two very antique monuments in the nave, and three in the chancel, to members of the family of Foljambe. Portions of the hamlets of Walton and Newbold, and the contiguous parts of the parish of Brampton, have been consolidated as a district to the new church of the latter. In 1838, a church was built and dedicated to the Holy Trinity. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians; also a Roman Catholic chapel at Spinkhill, in the parish. The free grammar school, for the endowment of which Godfrey Foljambe, Esq., in 1594, appropriated £13. 6. 8. annually, was founded in the reign of Elizabeth, and placed under the management of the corporation; the endowment, augmented by benefactions, produces annually £109. 10. 9.; the master is chosen by the trustees of charities, subject to approval by the Archbishop of York. The school-house was rebuilt by subscription in 1710, but is out of repair. The school, in common with the schools of Ashbourn and Wirksworth, has the preference, next after the founder's relatives, to two fellowships and two scholarships, founded by the Rev. James Beresford, in St. John's College, Cambridge. A school, intended originally as preparatory to the grammar school, was founded in 1690, and endowed by Cornelius Clarke, Esq.; the endowment was subsequently augmented by John Bright, senior, and John Bright, junior, Esqrs., and the income is now £74. A national school was built in 1814, and a Lancasterian school in 1819. Mrs. Judith Heathcote, and other members of the family, in 1619, appropriated estates, producing £114 per annum, to the apprenticing of children.

Thomas Large, Esq., in 1664, gave lands and tenements, now worth about £45 per annum, for the foundation and endowment of three almshouses, to which two more were added in 1751, by Mrs. Sarah Rose, who left £200 for their endowment. Almshouses for six aged persons were founded, in 1668, by George Taylor, Esq., who endowed them with property at present yielding £92 per annum. The dispensary, erected in 1800, is liberally supported by subscription. Godfrey Foljambe, Esq., in 1594, bequeathed the rectory of Attenborough, and an estate at Ashover, producing together about £640 a year, which sum, after paying £40 per annum to the minister, £13. 6. 8. to the master of the grammar school, £20 to Jesus' College, and £13. 6. 8. to Magdalen College, Cambridge, is appropriated to the relief of the poor. Godfrey Wolstenholme, in 1682, gave a house, let for £38. 5. per annum, which sum is distributed in coats and gowns; and Sir Godfrey Webster, in 1720, bequeathed £1100 South Sea stock. Mrs. Hannah Hooper, in 1755, gave £2000 three per cent. consols., and Mrs. Elizabeth Bagshaw, in 1802, £2000 three per cent. consols., the dividends on which are distributed to the poor. The union of Chesterfield comprises 34 parishes or places, and contains a population of 39,379. An hospital for lepers, founded prior to the 10th of Richard I., and dedicated to St. Leonard, existed here till the reign of Henry VIII.; and there was a guild or fraternity, dedicated to St. Mary and the Holy Cross, founded in the reign of Richard II., the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £19. The chantry of St. Michael, founded by Roger de Chesterfield, in 1357, and the chantry of the Holy Cross, founded in the reign of Edward III., were also among the ancient religious establishments of this place. There were besides, prior to the Reformation, three free chapels, dedicated respectively to St. James, St. Thomas, and St. Helen: on the site of the last the present free grammar school was built. Chesterfield gives the title of Earl to the family of Stanhope; a title conferred, Aug. 4th, 1628, on Sir Philip, Baron Stanhope, a firm supporter of the royal cause during the civil war.

CHESTERFORD, GREAT (ALL SAINTS), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of SAFFRON-WALDEN, hundred of UTTLESFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Saffron-Walden; containing 917 inhabitants. It is by most antiquaries identified with the Camboricum of Antoninus, and the foundation of walls, inclosing a quadrangular area of 50 acres, was, till very lately, plainly discernible. That it was a Roman station is evident, not only from its name, and the numerous Roman antiquities discovered at various times, but from its contiguity to several Roman roads, of which the Ikeneld and Ermin streets intersect each other in the immediate vicinity; and Roman bricks, coins of the earlier and later emperors, and numerous other relics have been found, in great quantities. Besides the larger camp, or station, there are several smaller camps, including one near the church, in the grounds between which and the river are traces of an amphitheatre: at the distance of half a mile from the larger camp is another, called Hingeston Barrows, and a third on the opposite side of the river. On an eminence, near the Roman road from Inckleton towards Newmarket, is Fleamsdyke, where there is a small square fort, probably the castra exploratorum, in the centre of which are vestiges of a building; and the Roman road to Grantchester may be plainly discovered, forming a ridge of 200 yards, in a direction towards the river above Cambridge. The PARISH comprises by admeasurement 2811 acres, of which 200 are woodland: the soil, in the more elevated parts, is a dry thin loam resting on a substratum of chalk, and in the valleys a rich loam on a gravelly bottom. The village is pleasantly situated, and commands an uninterrupted prospect extending into the county of Cambridge. The market has been discontinued; but a fair for horses is held on July 5th. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Little Chesterford annexed, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £427; patron and improPRIATOR, Marquess of Bristol. The tithes of both parishes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1801. The church is an ancient and spacious structure, and formerly contained a chantry, founded in the reign of Henry VIII., by William Howden, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £9. 9. 7. John Hart, of Saffron-Walden, in 1592, founded what he intended to be a grammar school, and endowed it with upwards of 30 acres of land, under the management of the Master and Fellows of Magdalen College, Cambridge, who appoint the master; but a considerable part of the endowment having been lost, the charity has been incorporated with a national school.

CHESTERFORD, LITTLE (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of SAFFRON-WALDEN, hundred of UTTLESFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from Saffron-Walden; containing 229 inhabitants. It is separated from the parish of Littlebury by the river Granta, and comprises 1166*a. 3r. 9p.*, of which about 65 acres are pasture, 107 woodland, and the rest arable. The living is a rectory, annexed to the vicarage of Great Chesterford, and valued in the king's books at £11. The church is a small ancient edifice, partly in the early and partly in the decorated English style; the chancel is separated from the nave by a screen of wood, and contains an ancient tomb of marble, with a recumbent figure of James Walsingham, Esq. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans.

CHESTERHOPE, a hamlet, in the parish of CORSENSIDE, N. E. division of TYNDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Bellingham. This place, which derives its name from the Roman castra, Habitancum, or Risingham, being situated at the foot of it, is of considerable antiquity. The church of Hexham had some property here at an early period: in 1294 the prior of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem claimed extensive privileges over lands he possessed in Chesterhope; and the Halls, Forsters, and others have subsequently been owners of estates in the district. At Park Head are the remains of the celebrated figure called Robin of Risingham, cut in bas-relief in a rock, and which may certainly be assigned to the Roman era in Britain; and stones bearing Latin inscriptions have been found, which are supposed to be relics of the station at the adjoining village of Risingham.

CHESTERTON (ST. ANDREW), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of CHESTERTON, county of CAMBRIDGE, 1½ mile (N. E.) from Cambridge; containing 1617 inhabitants. The name of this place is derived from a castrum, or fortification, called Arbury Camp, at a small distance from the village, three parts of the vallum of which are still remaining, inclosing a square area of nearly six acres, wherein many Roman coins have been found. It appears that every one who kept a fire here, in 1154, was bound to pay an Ely farthing, as it was called, to St. Peter's altar, in the cathedral of Ely; and the fourth farthing arising from this town and that of Grantchester used to be paid to the castle of Norwich, by the name of Ely ward penny, because that place received it before. The parish is watered by the river Cam, and comprises by computation 2700 acres, the soil of which is in general a gravelly earth, lying upon a subsoil of clay. In 1837, an act was passed for inclosing waste lands. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 12. 3½; net income, £206; patrons and improPRIATORS, Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The great tithes have been commuted for £500, and the vicarial for £180; the impropriate glebe consists of 90½ acres, and the vicarial contains 27½ acres, with a glebe-house. The church is principally in the decorated and later English styles. In 1729, £5 per annum, out of money left to the parish for charitable uses, were appropriated towards the education of ten children, and the school is otherwise supported by subscription. The poor law union of Chesterton comprises 38 parishes or places, and contains a population of 21,608. The remains of Cambridge Castle are in the parish.

CHESTERTON, a tything, in the parish of CIRENCESTER, hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER.

CHESTERTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of PETERBOROUGH, hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Stilton; containing 129 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the great north road, which is here crossed by the road from Lynn to Northampton: it comprises by admeasurement 1330 acres, consisting of arable and pasture land in nearly equal portions: the soil is a rich clay, in some parts mixed with red sand, and in others chalk, of fertile quality. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 3. 4., and in the gift of the Marquess of Huntley: the tithes have been commuted for £417. 11., and the glebe comprises $4\frac{1}{4}$ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is principally in the early English style. A school is chiefly supported by the rector. Midway between this and Castor is the site of the ancient city of Durobrivæ, the fort of which was placed on the Huntingdonshire side of the river Nene; and at Castle Field is a large tract, inclosed by a ditch and rampart, with the Roman road Ermin-street running through it obliquely. On making a road across the site of Durobrivæ, several stone coffins, urns, and coins were dug up; and by the side of the high road near this place, in 1754, was found a coffin of yellowish stone, six feet two inches long, within which were a skeleton, three glass lachrymatories, some coins, and scraps of white wood inscribed with Greek and Roman letters.

CHESTERTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BICESTER, hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Bicester; containing 393 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 8. 9.; net income, £210; patrons and appropriators, Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land in 1767. The church was consecrated in 1238. There is a school, in which 20 children are paid for by the Countess of Jersey. The Roman Akeman-street crosses the parish.

CHESTERTON, a township, in the parish of WOLSTANTON, union of WOLSTANTON and BURSLEM, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, and of the county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Newcastle-under-Lyme; containing 1207 inhabitants. The name of this place evidently has reference to the ancient Roman fortress situate here, the Mediolanum of Antonine; the site is still clearly marked out, and a large fosse exists along the north side of the station. Camden calls it Chesterton-under-Lyme. The township contains nearly 1100 acres on the south side of the parish: considerable quantities of blue bricks, tiles, and pipes for drains and conduits, of superior hardness, are manufactured here; and potteries have been established at Red-street, in the northern part of the township, for a long period. Several blast furnaces for smelting iron-stone are worked at Apedale, on the western confines. In the village is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a small free school, erected from the rents of some land, left by John Cowell, and producing £4 per annum for its maintenance.

CHESTERTON (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of SOUTHAM, Warwick division of the hundred of KING-

TON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 6 miles (S. E.) from WARWICK; containing 192 inhabitants. This place, which was once a populous town, is situated on the line of the Roman fosse-way; and derives its name from a Roman camp, within the limits of which coins have been discovered. The manor, long possessed by the Peito family, now belongs to Lord Willoughby de Broke. The parish comprises, with Kington, 3566 acres, of which the surface is hilly, and the soil chiefly clay. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £82; patron and impropiator, Lord Willoughby de Broke.

CHESTERTON, LITTLE.— See KINGTON.

CHESWARDINE (St. SWITHIN), a parish, in the union of DRAYTON, Drayton division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Drayton; containing 1015 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the gift of G. S. Harding, Esq.; the tithes have been commuted for £1015. 10., of which £605 belong to the Bishop of Chichester, £213 to the Rev. W. Otter, and £197. 10. to the incumbent, with a glebe of 30 acres. The church was rebuilt a few years since. There is a school, which has a bequest of £4 per annum; and a sum of about £36 per annum, the interest of bequests, is appropriated to the purchase of wheat, distributed among the poor.

CHESWICK, a township, in the parochial chapelry of ANCROFT, union of BERWICK-UPON-TWEED, ISLANDSHIRE, county of DURHAM; containing 290 inhabitants.

CHETNOLE, a chapelry, in the parish and hundred of YETMINSTER, union of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of DORSET, 7 miles (S. W. by S.) from Sherborne; containing 222 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Peter. A school is supported by endowment.

CHETTISCOMBE, a chapelry, in the parish, union, and hundred of TIVERTON, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Tiverton. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary.

CHETTISHAM, a chapelry, in the parish of ST. MARY, city, union, and Isle of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Ely; containing 90 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £79; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Ely. The chapel is dedicated to St. Michael.

CHETTLE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WIMBORNE and CRANBORNE, hundred of MONCKTON-UP-WIMBORNE, Wimborne division of DORSET, 6 miles (N. E.) from Blandford-Forum; containing 122 inhabitants. It is situated within a mile of the road from Exeter to London, through Blandford and Salisbury, and comprises 1113a. 3r. 25p., with a level surface and chalky soil. A stately ancient mansion, in the style of Sir John Vanbrugh, and probably the old manor-house, is in tolerable preservation, though unoccupied. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 2. 9., and in the gift of H. Chambers, Esq.; the tithes have been commuted for £180, and the glebe contains about 21 acres. The church is partly in the early and partly in the later English style; and has a very ancient and handsomely carved pulpit. Schools are supported by subscription. There is a large tumulus or barrow, which, from its extent, is called the "Giant's grave."

CHEYTON (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of BRIDGENORTH, hundred of SCOTTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, 4 miles (S. by W.) from Bridgenorth; containing 693 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Bridgenorth to Ludlow, and is intersected in the southern part by the road to Cleobury Mortimer; it comprises by measurement 3920 acres, the surface of which is undulated, and the soil a strong clay, resting upon marl and limestone, with some sandstone. Coal of moderate quality and of sulphureous smell is procured in tolerable quantity; clay for brick-making, which is carried on to some extent, is obtained near the collieries; and in the parish generally is found a brecciated limestone, which, when burnt, is of a reddish colour, and is used for manure, but considered to have only half the strength of white lime. There is likewise abundance of red sandstone alternated with the limestone, which is used for rubble, masonry, and for building cottages; in the south-east portion of the parish white freestone of good quality occurs, but is not quarried; and there is also some good flagstone. A few considerable streams intersect the surface and run into the Severn. The living is a rectory, with Deuxhill and Glazeley consolidated in 1760, valued in the king's books at £11; patron, T. W. W. Browne, Esq. The tithes, including those of the chapelry of Loughton, ecclesiastically annexed to this parish, have been commuted for £652. 10. 9., and the glebe comprises 11 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church was partly rebuilt about the year 1770; the tower, which was rebuilt in 1830, like the chancel, is in the early English style; the nave is of modern character. There is a bequest of about £8 per annum for teaching children; and a national school was erected in 1821. The produce of bequests, amounting to £260, is distributed among the poor.

CHEYWOOD (St. MARY AND St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union, hundred, and county of BUCKINGHAM, 5 miles (S. W. by W.) from Buckingham; containing 197 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Barton-Hartshorn: the tithes were commuted for land in 1812. The church, made parochial in 1480, is remarkable for some beautiful specimens of stained glass, formerly belonging to a priory of Augustine monks, founded by Sir Ralph de Norwich in 1244, and which was dissolved on account of its poverty in 1460, and annexed to the abbey of Nutley. There was also a hermitage, dedicated to St. Stephen and St. Lawrence, founded by a member of the Cheywode family, the representative of which claims suit and service, by prescriptive right, over this place and some neighbouring hamlets, that are said to have been included within the limits of an ancient forest of 1000 acres, called Rockwood.

CHEYWYND (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT, Newport division of the hundred of SOUTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, 1½ mile (N. by W.) from Newport; containing 740 inhabitants. It is on the road from Birmingham to Chester, and comprises 3738a. 32p.: a common kind of red sandstone is found, chiefly used for walls and cottages. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 16. 3., and in the gift of John Charles Burton Borough, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £714, and the glebe comprises 26½ acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

The church is a modern brick building, erected about the year 1775. A chapel of ease has been recently built in the village of Sambrook. There is a small place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school, now conducted on the national plan, is endowed with lands, producing £38. 12. per annum. The village of Sambrook is said to be the birthplace of Commodore Anson.

CHEVELEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of NEWMARKET, hundred of CHEVELEY, county of CAMBRIDGE, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Newmarket; containing 645 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 2526 acres. An act for inclosing lands was passed in 1841: stone is quarried for the roads. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 8. 1½., and in the gift of the Rev. James Thomas Bennet: the tithes have been commuted for £704, and the glebe contains 27 acres of fertile land, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a cruciform structure, with a central tower, supported by arches, and containing five bells; it has a very beautiful oak-screen, and some curious old monuments to the family of Folkes. A school was founded and endowed with an estate bequeathed by John Ray, by his will dated 1558, to which Lord Dovor, in 1709, added other land; the former is let for £60 a year, and the latter produces £20. There is also a girls' school, endowed by a person of the name of Reeve, the income of which is £9. In Cheveley Park is an old castle, surrounded by a fosse. A very remarkable fossil tooth was found in a gravel-pit a few years ago, upwards of six feet in length, with a curvature nearly circular, of which the diameter exceeds three feet; it is now in the museum at York.

CHEVENING (St. BOTOLPH), a parish, in the union of SEVEN-OAKS, hundred of CODSHEATH, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 3½ miles (N. W.) from Seven-Oaks; containing 1003 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 3774a. 3r. 15p., of which 1065 acres are arable, 1244 meadow and pasture, 1346 woodland, and 96 hop-grounds. It is distinguished as the residence of the Stanhope family, who have a fine seat here, at which the late earl, who was celebrated for his discoveries in mechanics and natural philosophy, established the improved printing-press bearing his name: his lordship died here, in 1816. A fair is held on May 16th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Archbishop of Canterbury: the tithes have been commuted for £761, and the glebe contains 23 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is adorned with several elegant monuments of the Lennard family, and one to Lady Frederica Stanhope. Various bequests of the Stanhope family are applied in apprenticing children; and there are two schools supported by subscription. The Pilgrims' path, which led towards Becket's shrine at Canterbury, passes in the vicinity, and forms a boundary of the Weald of Kent.

CHEVERELL, GREAT (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of DEVIZES, hundred of SWANBOROUGH, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS, 6 miles (S. by W.) from Devizes; containing 557 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation nearly 2000 acres; the manor forms part of the endowment of the almshouse at Heytesbury, founded by one of the Hungerford family. A small part of the population is engaged in the manufacture of edge-tools. A pleasure fair is held in the first week after the festival of St. Peter's. The living, once the property of Queen's College, Cambridge, to which it was given by Bishop Davenant, is valued in the king's books at £16; patron and incumbent, Rev. M. Atkinson: the tithes were commuted, in 1797, for 307 acres of land, valued at £350 per annum. The church is a plain neat structure. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a school is endowed with an acre of land and a cottage, by the late Mr. Townsend, for the instruction of six boys. Many Roman coins have been found in the parish. The late Dr. Lawrence, distinguished for his Bampton lectures, and last Archbishop of Cashel, was for some time rector.

CHEVERELL, LITTLE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of DEVIZES, hundred of SWANBOROUGH, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS, 5½ miles (S.) from Devizes; containing 295 inhabitants. It is situated immediately under the northern edge of Salisbury Plain, and comprises by measurement 1006 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 7. 3½; net income, £405; patron, Earl of Radnor. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1797. A school is supported by subscription.

CHEVETT, a township, in the parish of ROYSTON, wapentake of STAINCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 4¼ miles (S. S. E.) from Wakefield; containing 52 inhabitants. This place is of considerable antiquity, and styled in Domesday book Cevet; and in the early part of the 14th century there was a chapel here. Among the landed proprietors at various periods occur the families of Monk, Bosvile, Nevile, and Pilkington. The township comprises about 850 acres: the mansion was built in the reign of Henry VIII., and is an irregular edifice having several interior courts; the south front was added by the Neviles, who put the whole into repair. The North-Midland railway is carried over a viaduct of thirteen arches, each 21 feet in span, near Sandal, and afterwards under a tunnel 700 yards in length, 22 feet wide, and 26 feet high, in the formation of which, five shafts of 9 feet diameter were sunk: the total expense is calculated at £35,000.

CHEVINGTON, NORTHUMBERLAND.—See CHIVINGTON.

CHEVINGTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of THINGOE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (S. W. by W.) from Bury-St. Edmund's; containing 624 inhabitants, and comprising 2429a. 15p. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 3. 9.; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. White: the tithes have been commuted for £580, and the glebe consists of 32 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church has some Norman remains. The sum of £20, the rental of land and cottages purchased with benefactions, is annually distributed among poor families; and two schools are supported by the rector.

CHEW MAGNA (St. ANDREW), a parish (anciently a borough and market-town), in the union of CLUTTON, hundred of CHEW, E. division of SOMERSET, 6½ miles (S.) from Bristol; containing, with the tythings of Bishop-Sutton, Knowle with Knighton-Sutton, North Elm, and Stone, 2096 inhabitants, and comprising 5014 acres. The village is beautifully situated on an eminence to the north of the river Chew, and commands extensive views of the surrounding country. At the north-eastern extremity of the parish is a ville, called Norton Hautville, or Hawkfield, supposed to have been the property of Sir John de Hautville, who lived in the time of Henry III.: in the tything of Knighton-Sutton, at the southern extremity, stands Sutton Court, an ancient edifice, pleasingly situated, by some supposed to have been the residence of Fielding's Squire Western. The population is partly employed in coal-mines, in the tything of Bishop-Sutton, and in the manufacture of stockings and of edge-tools to a limited extent; formerly there was a considerable manufactory for cloth. The living is a vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, with Dundry annexed, valued in the king's books at £30. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the heirs of R. Roberts, Esq.; impropiator of the remainder of the great tithes, George Smyth, Esq. The tithes belonging to the vicar have been commuted for £416. 15., and those of Mr. Smyth for £98. 3. 9. The church is a massive and spacious edifice, with a nave and side aisles, 106 feet in length, by 60 in breadth, having a tower at the west end 103 feet high: in the eastern corner of the south aisle is a handsome monument of the Baker family, who formerly had large possessions in the parish, and from whom the manor of Chew-Baker has its name; and inserted in a window of the same aisle, is a wooden effigy, supposed to be that of Hautville: in the eastern corner of the north aisle are monuments to the Strachy family. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, and Wesleyans. Endowments producing about £13 per annum are appropriated to teaching boys; and one-fifth of a bequest of £3000 by Richard Jones, Esq., of Stowey, is appropriated to poor persons of Chew not receiving parochial aid. At the western extremity of the parish, adjoining North Whitcomb, on an eminence which commands a fine view towards the Bristol Channel, is Bow Ditch, or Burlidge, a circular camp, with triple intrenchments; and to the north of the village is a well called Bullywell, the water of which is said to be efficacious for diseases of the eye.

CHEW-STOKE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of CLUTTON, hundred of CHEW, E. division of SOMERSET, 4¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Pensford; containing 825 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the road from Bristol to Wells, and on the river Chew, abounds with limestone, and with a stone of a reddish granulated texture, in which are found imbedded a few fossils and cornua ammonis; they are both extensively quarried, the former for agricultural, and the latter for building, purposes, and there are also some quarries of white lias, which is used for paving. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 3. 4., and in the gift of the Rev. William Wait: the tithes have been commuted for £270. 12., and the glebe comprises 7 acres; the sum of £8. 8. is payable to the vicar of Chew Magna. The rectory-house, formerly used as a workhouse, has recently been restored at an expense of £400 by the present incumbent, and is a very singular edifice, considered by antiquaries as one of the most interesting antiquities in the county. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A parochial school was founded in 1718, by a few inhabitants, who raised funds for the erection and endowment of a suitable building; the endowment, augmented by subsequent benefactions, produces a revenue of £106. The produce of benefactions amounting to £35 per annum is distributed at Christmas among the poor. On the lands of Mr. Gray, in the parish, are some remains of a Roman military station, and coins have been found there.

CHEWTON, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of KEYNSHAM, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 138 inhabitants. It is situated on the left bank of the river Chew, about midway between Compton-Dando and Keynsham.

CHEWTON, a tything, in the parish of MILTON, union of LYMINGTON, hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, Lymington and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Christchurch; containing 633 inhabitants.

CHEWTON-MENDIP (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of WELLS, hundred of CHEWTON, E. division of SOMERSET, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Wells; containing, with the tything of North Widcombe, 1216 inhabitants. The village is situated amidst the Mendip hills, where are extensive mines of lead-ore and lapis calaninaris: the former are not now worked, and the trade in the latter is much reduced. In the reign of Henry VIII., a dispute arose between the prior of Greenoar cell upon Mendip and the tenants within this manor, relative to some infringement on his rights by the miners, to settle which the lord chief justice came expressly into the county, and laid the basis of the laws by which the miners are now governed. Any miner considering himself aggrieved complains to the leadreeve, who summons a jury of 24 miners, from whose decision there is no appeal; various modes of punishment are applied, the highest being expulsion from the hills. There is a fair for toys, &c., on Holy-Thursday; and the petty-sessions for the division are held here. The living is a discharged vicarage, with those of Emborrow, Paulton, and Stone-Easton annexed, valued in the king's books at £29. 11. 8.; patron and impropiator, W. Kingsmill, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £352. 10., and the vicarial for £235; the glebe comprises 31 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is in the decorated style of English architecture, with some Norman remains, having a fine tower, 126 feet high, surmounted by lofty pinnacles. There is a chapel of ease at Farrington-Gurney, in the parish; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also an endowed school supported by the income arising from land on Chew down, inclosed a few years since, and the annual rent of which is about £20. A school for girls was established agreeably to the will of John Dory, who bequeathed the sum of £100. Chewton gives the title of Viscount to Earl Waldegrave.

CHICH, county of ESSEX.—See OSYTH, St.

CHICHELEY (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Newport-Pagnell; containing 256 inhabitants. Chicheley Hall, a handsome and spacious quadrilateral edifice of red brick, was built, in 1769, by Sir John Chester, who intermarried with the Bagot family: the estate descended from Charles Bagot, brother of Lord Bagot, to his son, the present proprietor, who has assumed the name and arms of Chester. The making of lace affords employment to about fifty people. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £66; patron, Charles Chester, Esq., who is also impropiator of the great tithes, and owner of the parish. A school is supported by subscription.

CHICHESTER, a city and market-town, having exclusive jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of BOX and STOCKBRIDGE, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, 62 miles (S. W. by S.) from London; containing 8512 inhabitants. This city, which is of very remote antiquity, derives the latter part of its name from its having been a Roman station, supposed to have been Regnum; and the former, from its subsequent occupation by Cissa, about the close of the fifth century. About the year 47, Flavius Vespasian, who took possession of this portion of Britain, made the place his head-quarters, and threw up an intrenchment three miles in extent, some traces of which are still apparent. In the reign of Claudius Cæsar, the Romans, as appears from an inscription upon a stone dug up in 1723 (now in the possession of the Duke of Richmond, at Goodwood), erected a temple here, and probably surrounded their station with walls. Other Roman inscriptions have been discovered, and a curious piece of tessellated pavement, and several Roman coins were, in 1727, found in the bishop's garden. About the close of the fifth century the city was taken from the Britons by Ella, whose son Cissa rebuilt it, and called it after his own name, Cissa's ceaster, fortifying it also with a strong intrenchment. It subsequently became the seat of the South Saxon kings, in whose possession it remained till the middle of the seventh century, when Wulfhere, the Mercian, invaded it, and took Athelwald, its king, prisoner; but on his embracing Christianity, he was reinstated in his dominions, and was afterwards slain in battle by Ceadwalla, a prince of Wessex, who subjugated the kingdom of the South Saxons. On the union of the Saxon kingdoms by Egbert, in the year 803, Chichester was of considerable importance, but it suffered greatly from the Danes; and, at the time of the Conquest, had declined so much, that it had scarcely a hundred houses within the walls. On the transfer of the South Saxon see from Selsey, where it had remained for more than 300 years, to this place, the town regained its former importance, and after the Conquest, was bestowed on Roger de Montgomery, who erected a castle adjoining the ramparts, and four gates, and gave the south-western quarter of the city for the site of the cathedral and residence of the clergy. In the reign of Henry I. a cathedral was built by Bishop Ralph, which being destroyed by fire, that prelate erected a second edifice far exceeding the former in magnificence, a considerable portion of which is incorporated with the present building. In 1189, the greater part of the city was destroyed by fire, and the cathedral, having sustained great injury, was repaired and enlarged by Siffied, the seventh bishop, whose effigy in marble was placed in a niche within the interior. The castle was ordered to be demolished by King John, but the sentence was not carried into effect till the first of Henry III., 1216; after which a Franciscan convent was founded on its site. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., Sir Edward Ford, the sheriff, with the loyal gentry of the county, by assurances of raising a large force in Sussex for the royal cause, invited Lord Hopton from the west, and Chichester, being a walled town, was fixed upon for their head-quarters. While employed in collecting troops, improving their resources, repairing the fortifications, and strengthening their position, they were surprised by the sudden appearance of Sir William Waller, the parliamentary general, whose forces had been joined by several troops of horse, commanded by Col. Morley and Sir Matthew Liverey, and who immediately commenced the siege of the place, which was defended for some time with obstinate courage; but after an ineffectual resistance for ten days, the citizens were compelled to surrender on the 29th of December, 1642. The cathedral was partly demolished by the parliamentary forces, and the conventual buildings plundered and nearly levelled with the ground; the churches of St. Bartholomew and St. Pancras were battered down, and the houses of the most eminent of the citizens destroyed. Sir William Waller made the convent of the Grey friars his head-quarters, and his soldiers were quartered in the cathedral, the tombs and monuments of which were mutilated and defaced, the brasses torn from the slabs, and every species of injury wantonly committed. The city remained in the hands of the parliamentarians for six years after its surrender, and in 1648, the ordnance was removed to Arundel Castle, the garrison removed, and the fortifications demolished.

Seal and Arms.

The city is pleasantly situated on a gentle eminence, nearly surrounded by the small stream Lavant, and consists chiefly of four principal streets, meeting nearly at right angles in the centre of the town, where is an octagonal cross in the decorated English style, which is considered, in design and execution, equal to any structure of its class in England. The streets were formerly terminated by four gates in the ancient embattled walls with which the city was encircled: the last of these gates was taken down in 1773, and of the walls, some portions are remaining on the north and east sides, where spacious terraces were raised in 1725, covered with gravel, and shaded with rows of lofty elms, which have been widened and much improved, affording a pleasant promenade for the inhabitants, and highly ornamental to the city. The houses are in general handsome and well built; and the streets are paved and lighted with gas, under an act of parliament obtained in 1791, for the general improvement of the town, which is also amply supplied with water. At the north entrance are the barracks, a spacious and handsome building, adapted to the accommodation of 16 officers, and 328 privates of cavalry, with stabling for 340 horses; and for 48 officers and 888 privates of infantry, with spacious grounds for exercise and parade. Without the walls, a new suburb has lately arisen called Summerstown, which consists of several spacious streets, containing handsome and well-built houses, and forms a pleasing appendage to the city. The theatre, a neat plain edifice, was rebuilt in the year 1791; the assembly-rooms, in which assemblies and concerts are held, were built by subscription in 1781; and a public subscription library, situated in the churchyard, was established in 1794. A mechanics' institute was formed in 1824, for which a handsome building has been erected at the extremity of South-street; it is 50 feet long, and 25 feet wide, built of brick, and faced with cement; the interior, which is lighted by two ranges of Grecian windows, contains, on the ground-floor, the library and apartments for the librarian, and on the upper floor a lecture-room. A Literary and Philosophical Society was established in 1831, and holds its meetings in a house in South-street, built by Sir Christopher Wren; it contains a valuable museum, reading-room, and other requisite apartments. Races are held in August at Goodwood, about five miles north of the city; the Grand Stand, lately built, is a handsome quadrilateral building, 120 feet long, and 70 feet wide, surrounded by a colonnade of the Doric order, and capable of accommodating nearly 3000 persons.

The TRADE consists principally in malt, corn (of which a considerable quantity is sent coastwise), flour, timber, and coal. The Lavant empties itself into the sea at Dell-quay, two miles distant from the town, where is a small harbour, into which vessels can enter at high water, and where a collector of customs is stationed to superintend the transactions of the port, which carries on a small foreign trade, chiefly in timber. Lobsters and prawns, caught at Selsey, about seven miles south of the town, and esteemed the finest on the coast, are sent in great quantities to the London market; and a large quantity of salt is made at Birdham, about three miles from Chichester. A branch from the Portsmouth and Arundel canal, on the south side of the town, contributes greatly to facilitate and promote its trade. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday; and on every alternate Wednesday is a large market for cattle, sheep, and hogs. The market-house, a convenient structure, was built in 1807: the corn market is held on Wednesday at the Corn Exchanges in the North and East streets. There are fairs on St. George's-day, Whit-Monday, St. James'-day, Old Michaelmas-day, and the 20th of Oct., the last being called the Sloe fair. The Corn Exchange in East-street, erected in 1837, after a design by Mr. Elliot, is a handsome building, 250 feet in depth; the principal entrance is by a Doric portico of six columns, projecting over the pavement, and resting upon square plinths, and supporting a triangular pediment, with entablature and cornice: between the corresponding pilasters of the same order, and the ante, three large folding-doors lead into the hall, which is 80 feet long, and 50 feet wide, and lighted by a handsome range of windows on each side; and behind it are ample stores for the corn which is deposited for sale.

The earliest charter of INCORPORATION extant is one granted by King Stephen: numerous others have been bestowed at various times, the principal of which were granted in the reigns of Henry II., Edward II. and III., Henry VI. and VII., and James I. and II. By the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, the body corporate was made to consist of a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors; the borough is divided into two wards, and the municipal and parliamentary boundaries are co-extensive. The elective franchise was conferred in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time the city has returned two members to parliament. The right of election was formerly vested in the corporation, in the freemen at large, and in the inhabitants paying scot and lot within the city and liberties, about 600 in number, with the exception only of those of the extra-parochial district of Newton, which, nevertheless, is within the walls, and subject to the jurisdiction of the city magistrates. By the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the non-resident freemen, except within seven miles, were disfranchised; but, in consequence of the scot and lot right of voting; the franchise was not otherwise altered, except by extending it to the £10 householders of a district which was incorporated with the old borough. The old borough comprised 445 acres, but the limits of the new contain 604: the mayor is returning officer. The mayor for the time being and for the previous year are justices by virtue of their office, and there are six others. The recorder holds sessions for the city and liberties, and a court of record every Monday, for the recovery of debts to any amount. There is also a court leet, on the last Monday in November; and petty-sessions are held every Monday for the borough, and by the county magistrates every Saturday. The Michaelmas quarter-sessions for the western division of the county likewise take place here. The guildhall, anciently the chapel of the Franciscan convent, is 82 feet long, 31 feet wide, and 43 feet high; the east window, of five lights, divided by fluted slender mullions of Sussex marble, is a beautiful specimen of rich flowing tracery. The council-chamber, built by subscription, in 1730, is handsome; having arcades formed by pillars of the Tuscan order. The common gaol was built in 1783; it contains only six apartments, five for males and one for females. The town is the principal place of election for the western division of the county.

Chichester is the seat of a DIOCESE, the jurisdiction of which extends over the county of Sussex. The episcopal chair was first fixed at Selsey, in 681, and transferred to this place in 1075, when Stigand, then bishop of Selsey, and chaplain to William the Conqueror, was appointed the first bishop of Chichester. The establishment consists of a bishop, dean, thirty-one prebendaries, of whom four are residentiary, a precentor, chancellor, and treasurer. The bishop has jurisdiction over 262 benefices, and the patronage of the precentorship, the chancellorship of the diocese and that of the church, the treasurer'ship, the two archdeaconries, twenty-seven non-resident canonries, and twenty-eight benefices, and of two others alternately; his income amounts to £4200 per annum. The patronage of the Dean and Chapter includes two prebends; the minor canonries, and eighteen benefices, with two others alternately; their net revenue amounts to £2500. The four minor canons form a corporation, with a net revenue of £244. The Cathedral, dedicated to St. Peter, erected by Bishop Ralph, in the reign of Henry I., and repaired and enlarged by succeeding bishops, is a spacious structure, partly Norman, and partly in the early and decorated styles of English architecture, with a tower rising from the centre, surmounted by a lofty octagonal spire; at the west end of the south aisle is a tower in the Norman style, and on the north side of the north aisle, ranging with the west front, is a detached campanile tower, crowned with octagonal turrets at the angles, above which rises a lantern connected by flying buttresses; springing from the turrets at the angles of the tower. The interior is principally in the early English style; the nave, which is 150 feet in length, has a plain but neatly groined roof; the ribs of which spring from light pilasters between the clerestory windows, and is divided from the aisles by a range, on each side, of eight clustered columns, supporting a series of well-formed arches; the triforium is of early English character, and in front of the clerestory windows is an upper triforium, the pillars of which have capitals, ornamented with palm-leaves. The aisles consist of two ranges on each side; the outer ranges are lighted by windows of large dimensions, and appear to have contained numerous chapels. A screen of stone, supporting the organ gallery, divides the nave from the choir, which, including the Norman arches that sustain the tower, is 134 feet in length, and the roof is supported by a range of three pointed arches on each side, resting on clustered columns similar to those of the nave; it is flagged with marble, and contains the prebendal stalls, bishop's throne, and the tabernacle work, erected by Bishop Sherborne, in the sixteenth century, ornamented with a profusion of gilding. The east end terminates in a wainscotted altar-screen, with panels of crimson velvet; and beyond the altar-screen is the presbytery, of which the roof is supported by arches of graceful form, rising from clustered columns of Petworth marble, with a circular window at the east end. The north transept is separated from the cathedral, and appropriated as the parish church of St. Peter the Great. The Lady Chapel, which is of later date, and ornamented with a Catherine-wheel window, has been divided into two portions, of which the upper forms the vestibule of the Chapter library, and the lower the mausoleum of the Richmond family; and on the east of the south transept is the sacristy, now used as a chapter-house. The south transept, which contains a remarkably fine monument to the memory of Bishop Langton, and the shrine which canopies the tomb of St. Richard, has an elegant window of seven lights, in the decorated style, and is adorned with two large and interesting historical paintings, for which it is indebted to the munificence and skill of Bishop Sherborne, and which, though defaced by the swords of Cromwell's soldiers, are considered very fine specimens of early painting; also with a series of portraits of several bishops of Chichester, and of the kings of England from the Conquest, concluding with George III. One of the paintings represents the foundation of the see at Selsey by Ceadwalla; the other, Bishop Sherborne, attended by his ecclesiastics, petitioning Henry VII. for a confirmation of the charter granted by Ceadwalla. There are several monuments and ancient pieces of sculpture in the cathedral: at the west end of the middle south aisle is a fine whole-length statue of Mr. Huskisson; and, in the same aisle, an interesting monument to the memory of the poet Collins, executed in white marble by Flaxman, and erected by subscription. The cloisters, occupying three sides of an irregular quadrangle, are in the later style. Within the last few years considerable improvements have been made in the interior of the cathedral, which has been repaired and partly restored; thick coats of whitewash and plaster, which had accumulated for ages, have been removed, and several of the finer portions of the internal embellishment brought to light, among which are some beautiful arches over the entrance to the Lady Chapel; the choir has been enlarged and beautified, and many of the old seats and other obstructions have been removed from the nave. It is now undergoing another renovation, such as restoring the ancient tombs and their effigies, and the mutilated Purbeck marble columns, the whole under the direction of Mr. Richardson, who lately renovated the Temple church. The Bishop's Palace, situated in some pleasant grounds, neatly laid out, near the cathedral, and bounded by part of the ancient ramparts of the city, after undergoing numerous changes in its external appearance, was repaired in 1725, and presents a modern front, consisting of a centre and two wings connected by an open corridor; attached is a handsome chapel, in the early English style. The principal entrance to the palace court is through the Canon-gate, erected in the reign of Richard II., above which was the ecclesiastical prison. The deanery, built by Dean Sherlock, afterwards Bishop of London, is a modern edifice, erected in 1725. Of the ancient houses for the canons, only two are now remaining, which have been assigned to the two senior residentiaries; in one of these is a fine Norman arch, with highly enriched mouldings. The house in which the Precentor lives, is said to have been anciently the residence of William D'Albini, the fourth Earl of Arundel.

Chichester comprises the PARISHES of All Saints, or the Pallant or Palatinate (so called as being a peculiar of the Archbishop of Canterbury), containing 327 inhabitants; St. Andrew, 625; St. Martin, 282; St. Olave, 238; St. Pancras, partly within and partly without the walls, 1065; St. Peter the Great, or the Subdeanery, 5021; St. Peter the Less, 349; St. Bartholomew Without, 297; and the precinct of the Cathedral Close, 145. These parishes were, by act of parliament, in 1753, united for the better maintenance of the poor, under the inspection of guardians. There is also an extra-parochial district called Newtown, formerly the Black friars, containing 123 persons; likewise a small extra-parochial plot beyond the walls, called St. James', and containing 40 inhabitants. The living of All Saints is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 17. 6.; net income, £55; patron, Archbishop of Canterbury. The living of St. Andrew's is a discharged rectory, valued at £4. 13. 4.; net income, £102; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The church is a neat edifice, in the later English style. The living of St. Martin's is a discharged rectory, valued at £1. 6. 8.; net income, £67; patrons, the Dean and Chapter. The church, which was rebuilt by Mrs. Dear, of the city, is a handsome structure, in the decorated English style: the interior is richly ornamented, and contains a fine monument lately erected to the memory of that lady. The living of St. Olave's is a discharged rectory, valued at £4. 18. 9.; net income, £85; patrons, the Dean and Chapter. The living of St. Pancras is a discharged rectory, valued at £8. 10. 8.; net income, £120; patrons, the Trustees of Rev. G. Bliss. The church, which was destroyed during the parliamentary war, was rebuilt by subscription in 1750. The living of St. Peter's the Great is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 8. 4.; net income, £150; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter. The church is formed of the north transept of the cathedral. The district church, dedicated to St. Paul, is situated in the centre of a spacious cemetery in the suburb of Summerstown, near the north gate; it is a handsome edifice, in the later English style, with a lofty square embattled tower, and was built at an expense of £4500, raised by subscription, and was opened for divine service on the 13th of Oct. 1836. The living is in the patronage of the Vicar, after whose demise it will be in the Dean and Chapter; net income, £150. The living of St. Peter's the Less is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £1. 6. 8.; net income, £56; patron, Dean of Chichester. The church is an ancient edifice in the early English style. The living of St. Bartholomew's Without is a perpetual curacy; net income, £65; patron and appropriator, Dean of Chichester. The church, which was demolished during the parliamentary war, has been lately rebuilt. At Newton, an extra-parochial district within the walls of the city, a proprietary chapel, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, was erected in 1813, on the lands of the monastery of the Black friars, at an expense of £7000, raised partly in shares and partly by subscription; it is a handsome edifice of white brick, with a campanile turret, and two porches of Roman cement; the interior is well arranged, and contains 900 sittings, of which 250 are free. By act of parliament, passed in 1812, the Dean and Chapter, the Mayor, and all subscribers of £100, are perpetual trustees, and appoint the minister, whose fixed stipend of £80 is augmented by the rent of six pews, producing £35 per annum, and an endowment of £200 by the Rev. S. Barbut, and £300, Queen Anne's Bounty. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Huntingtonians, Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians.

The free grammar school was founded in 1497, by Bishop Story, chiefly for the training of youth intended for holy orders, and endowed with the prebend of Highley, which is annexed to the mastership, and with tithes and land in other parts of Sussex; the management is vested in the bishop, who confirms the appointment of a master nominated by the Dean and Chapter. Archbishop Juxon; the learned Selden; Collins, the poet; and the late Dr. Hurdis, Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford, received the rudiments of their education in the school. A free school for affording nautical education to boys, was founded, in 1702, by Oliver Whitby, Esq., who endowed it with lands now producing £1230 per annum: charity schools are supported by subscription; and there are also national and Lancasterian schools. St. Mary's hospital, founded by one of the deans in the reign of Henry II., for two men and six women, was re-founded by Queen Elizabeth, in 1562, for a warden or custos in holy orders, two men, and three women; the warden has a stipend of £160, and each of the inmates an allowance of £30 per annum; the building consists of a refectory, on each side of which are rooms for the inmates, and at the east end a chapel, in which divine service is performed twice every day. The dispensary, established in 1784, and a noble infirmary, in 1827, about a mile north of the city, are supported by voluntary contributions. The latter, which is denominated the West Sussex or East Hampshire General Infirmary and Dispensary, was erected in 1826; the building, a handsome range in the Grecian style, is 120 feet in length; a wing has been added, for the erection of which the sum of £1000 was presented by Charles Dixon, Esq. Mr. John Hardham, of London, bequeathed property producing £700 per annum, to be applied to the diminution of the poor rates.

An ancient hospital for lepers was founded in the reign of Richard I.; and to the south-east of the city, was a house of Black friars, established by Eleanor, queen of Edward I., and dedicated to St. Mary and St. Vincent. At St. Roche's hill, where was formerly a chapel dedicated to that saint, may be traced the remains of a circular Danish encampment. At Gowshill, about half a mile further, is an oblong camp; and on the same side, though nearer to the town, another of similar form, but larger, surrounded by a strong rampart and a single moat; they are both supposed to be Roman, and were, perhaps, occupied by Vespasian, when he landed on this coast. On making some alterations in the choir of the cathedral in 1829, while removing an old staircase near the altar, four large coffins of Sussex marble, beautifully polished, were discovered, in each of which was a skeleton in perfect preservation, which, from the remains of garments, appeared to have been interred in full canonicals, with pastoral staff, chalice, patten, and rings. Two ancient pieces of sculpture were also found near the stalls on the south side of the choir, one representing Mary and her sister Martha kneeling before our Saviour at the porch of a temple, the other representing the raising of Lazarus from the dead; they are placed against the wall of the south aisle, near Bishop Sherborne's monument. Near the vicarage in South-street is an ancient crypt in fine preservation, to which is a descent of six steps from the level of the pavement; its history is very imperfectly known, but it is supposed to have belonged to the monastery of St. Peter; it is 36 feet in length, 24 in breadth, and 11 feet high; the roof, which is finely groined, is supported in the centre by a range of circular dwarf columns with capitals, and the arches terminate in corbels on the walls. Bradwardine and Juxon, Archbishops of Canterbury; Lawrence Somercote, a great canonist and writer; and the poets Collins and Hayley, were natives of the city. The learned Dr. Chillingworth was buried in the cloisters, and John and George Smith, celebrated landscape-painters, were buried at St. Olave's. Chichester confers the title of earl on the family of Pelham.

CHICKERELL, EAST, a tything, in the parish of WEST CHICKERELL, union of WEYMOUTH, hundred of CULLIFORD-TREE, Dorchester division of DORSET; containing 24 inhabitants.

CHICKERELL, WEST, a parish, in the union of WEYMOUTH, hundred of CULLIFORD-TREE, Dorchester division of DORSET, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Weymouth; containing, with the tythings of East Chickereil and Putton, 531 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 16. 0½.; net income, £320; patrons, Duke of Cleveland and Dowager Countess of Sandwich. The tithes have been commuted for £200, and the glebe contains 45½ acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

CHICKLADE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of TISBURY, hundred of DUNWORTH, Hindon and S. divisions of WILTS, 1 mile (N.) from Hindon; containing 109 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 5. 3., and in the patronage of the Marquess of Bath: the tithes have been commuted for £193, and the glebe comprises 33½ acres. The church has been rebuilt.

CHICKNEY (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of DUNMOW, N. division of ESSEX, 6 miles (N. W. by N.) from Dunmow; containing 59 inhabitants.

It comprises 700*a.* 2*r.* 32*p.*, of which about 517 acres are arable, 127 pasture, and 36 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of H. Cranmer, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £170, and the glebe comprises 40½ acres. The church, situated on elevated ground, is a small edifice, with a tower of stone, surmounted by a shingled spire.

CHICKSANDS, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of BIGGLESWADE, hundred of CLIFTON, county of BEDFORD, 1½ mile (W. N. W.) from Shefford; containing 60 inhabitants. A priory for canons and nuns of the rule of St. Gilbert of Sempringham was founded in 1150, by Pain de Beauchamp, and the Lady Roas, his wife: the two quadrangles, with the cloisters, remain entire, and have been converted into a modern mansion.

CHICKSGROVE, a tything, in the parish and union of TISBURY, hundred of DUNWORTH, Hindon and S. divisions of WILTS, 4½ miles (E. S. E.) from Hindon.

CHICKSTON, a hamlet, in the parish of LITTLEHAM, union of ST. THOMAS, hundred of EAST BUDLEIGH, Woodbury and S. divisions of DEVON. Here was formerly a chapel, dedicated to our Saviour.

CHICKWARD, a township (with PEMBERS-OAK and LILWALL), in the parish and union of KINGTON, hundred of HUNTINGDON, county of HEREFORD; containing 380 inhabitants.

CHIDDEN, a tything, in the parish and hundred of HAMBLEDON, union of DROXFORD, Droxford and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 8½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Petersfield; containing, with Glidden, 207 inhabitants.

CHIDDINGFOLD (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of HAMBLEDON, Second division of the hundred of GODALMING, W. division of SURREY, 6 miles (S.) from Godalming; containing 1135 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Godalming to Chichester, and comprises about 5766 acres. The living is a rectory, with Haslemere annexed, valued in the king's books at £26. 4. 7., and in the patronage of the Dean of Salisbury: the tithes of Chiddingfold have been commuted for £630, and there is a glebe of 13½ acres. The church is in the early English style, with some later additions. A national school is supported by subscription.

CHIDDINGLY, a parish, in the union of HAILSHAM, hundred of SHIPLAKE, rape of PEVENSEY, E. division of SUSSEX, 7 miles (S. E.) from Uckfield; containing 930 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from London to Eastbourne, and comprises 4393*a.* 3*r.* 16*p.*, of which about 2100 acres are arable, 975 meadow and pasture, 1051 wood, and 80 hop-grounds; the surface is pleasingly undulated, and from Peake Hill are richly diversified prospects. Dicker Common, which was inclosed by act of parliament in 1813, is now fine corn land. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Countess Amherst; impropiator, A. E. Fuller, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £550, and the vicarial for £252. 3.; the impropriate glebe comprises 34½ acres, and the vicarial 7 acres. The church is a handsome edifice, chiefly in the later style, with a square embattled tower of the early English style, surmounted by a spire; at the east end of the south aisle is a chapel in which is a splendid, though mutilated, monument to Sir John Jefferay, Knt., lord chief baron of the exchequer in the reign of Elizabeth. Two schools are supported by subscription.

CHIDDINGSTONE (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of SEVEN-OAKS, hundred of SOMERDEN, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 8 miles (S. S. W.) from Seven-Oaks; containing 1405 inhabitants. The parish in the Textus Roffensis is called Cidingstane, and in other records Chiding-stone, according to tradition, from a large stone, supposed from its name to have been the spot where judicial affairs were transacted by the ancient Britons. It comprises 5705*a. 1r. 19p.*, and is bounded on the south by a branch of the Medway, and intersected by the river Eden, about a mile south of which, on an eminence, is the village. The South-Eastern railway passes a little to the north. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £28. 9. 4½, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury: the tithes have been commuted for £868, and the glebe comprises 7 acres, to which there is an excellent glebe-house. The church is a very neat building, chiefly in the later English style, and contains some handsome monuments to the Streatfield family, and a peal of bells; the tower is considered the finest in the county. There are national schools.

CHIDEOCK (ST. GILES), a parish, in the union of BRIDPORT, hundred of WHITCHURCH-CANONICORUM, Bridport division of DORSET, 2¾ miles (W.) from Bridport; containing 826 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south by the English Channel. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed, with Marshwood and Stanton-St. Gabriel, to the vicarage of Whitchurch-Canonicorum. There is a place of worship for Roman Catholics.

CHIDHAM, a parish, in the union of WEST BOURNE, hundred of BOSHAM, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Chichester; containing 325 inhabitants. This parish, which forms a peninsula on the coast, is bounded on the east by Bosham Creek, on the west by Thorney Channel, and on the south by the harbour of Chichester. It has been attempted several times to open a more direct communication between this place and Bosham, by means of an embankment of the sea, but hitherto without success; the last embankment, which was 550 yards in length, and 15 feet high, was swept away by the memorable storm of 1822. The soil is a marl of the richest kind, producing wheat and oats of superior quality; and the Chidham white, or Ledge-wheat seed, which is in so great estimation, takes its name from having been first raised in this parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 19. 2.; net income, £114; patron, W. Newland, Esq.; impropriators, the Landowners. The church is chiefly in the early English style, with later additions.

CHIDLOW, a township, in the parish of MALPAS, union of WREXHAM, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 2 miles (S. E.) from Malpas; containing 12 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £18. 10., payable to the rectors of the parish.

CHIEVELEY, or CHEVELIE (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of NEWBURY, hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, 4½ miles (N. by E.) from Newbury; containing 1936 inhabitants, and consisting of the chapelries of Leckhampstead, Oare, and Winterbourne, and the tythings of Courage and Snelsmore. This place was the residence of the Prior of Abingdon, whose ancient seat still retains the name of Priors' Court. The parish comprises 8925*a. 3r. 5p.*, of which the surface is in general flat, and is watered by the Winterbourne rivulet. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £26. 11. 3.; net income, £1174; patrons, alternately, John Thomas Wasey, Esq., and the Rev. Christopher Capel; impropriators, various landowners. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1810. There are chapels at Leckhampstead, Oare, and Winterbourne; and a place of worship for Wesleyans. In 1759, Thomas Henshaw granted an annuity of £10; with a school-house at North Heath, and in 1805, Catherine Mather bequeathed £800, both for educating children; the school-house was rebuilt in 1839, and the school placed in union with the National Society.

CHIGNAL (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHELMSFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 3½ miles (N. W.) from Chelmsford; containing 252 inhabitants. The soil is generally inferior, and a considerable quantity is a wet deep loam resting on a clayey marl, which, under the best management, is far from being productive. The living is a rectory, with that of St. Mary and Mashbury united, valued in the king's books at £10. 14. 7.; net income, £430; patrons, Executors of the late Rev. B. Hanbury. The church is a small edifice, partly of brick and partly of stone, with a spire of wood; and near it is the parsonage-house, a handsome edifice. There was formerly a church dedicated to St. Mary, but it was taken down long since; the ancient churchyard is now a small field, called St. Mary's croft. Here is a national school.

CHIGNAL-SMEALY (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHELMSFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 4¾ miles (N. W. by N.) from Chelmsford; containing 94 inhabitants. This is one of the smallest parishes in the county, containing only about 300 acres of land, the greater part of which is of very inferior quality. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.; net income, £120; patrons, alternately, F. Austen, Esq., and the family of Coke. The church is a small building of brick, with an embattled tower, and contains some ancient monuments.

CHIGWELL (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of EPPING, hundred of ONGAR, S. division of ESSEX, 6 miles (S.) from Epping, and 12 (N. E.) from London; containing 2059 inhabitants. This place was originally within the bounds of the great forest of Waltham, and in ancient records is styled Cingwella, supposed to imply the King's Well, a purgative spring here, from which its present name is derived. In the adjacent forest was formerly a royal mansion, designated Potteles, or Langfords, the only memorial of which is preserved in the name of the site, now called King's Place Farm. The parish consists of land in a high state of cultivation, and of great fertility; the scenery is pleasingly rural, and embellished with rich woods and thriving plantations; and in the immediate neighbourhood are several handsome seats and villas. The village consists principally of one long street, on the road from London to Ongar and Dunmow, and contains many substantial houses.

At a distance of a mile to the south-east of the church is a range of detached villas and good houses, called Chigwell Row, forming one of the most populous and respectable parts of the parish. From these dwellings, particularly from the top of Hog-Hill House, a hunting-seat, built by the late Sir James Tylney Long, Bart., is a splendid panoramic view, embracing St. Paul's Cathedral, the whole line of the Thames for many miles, Norwood, Shooter's Hill, Greenwich Hospital and Park, Woolwich Arsenal, and a large portion of the county of Kent down to Gravesend. The air is very salubrious, owing to the elevated position of the parish, and the inhabitants are noted for longevity. A road made across Hainault forest from Chigwell Row to Romford, by subscription, in 1809, affords great facilities for traffic to the agriculturists and others of the northern part of Essex, Herts, Middlesex, and Bucks, to the great market of Romford. Rolls Park, in the parish, was purchased by Eliab Harvey, in the beginning of the seventeenth century, and was the residence of his descendant, Admiral Sir Eliab Harvey, K. G. C., who distinguished himself in the battle of Trafalgar, when his own ship, the Téméraire, was boarded by two French ships, both of which, after a severe struggle, were captured and taken in tow as prizes.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £18; patron and appropriator, Prebendary of St. Pancras, in the Cathedral of St. Paul, London. The great tithes have been commuted for £900, and the vicarial for £500; the prebendary's glebe contains 56½ acres, and the vicar's nearly 11 acres, and there is a glebe-house. The church is an ancient structure, exhibiting in the south entrance and other parts some remains of early Norman architecture, with a wooden belfry and spire; on the north side of the chancel is an effigy in brass of Dr. Samuel Harsnet, many years vicar of the parish, and successively Bishop of Chichester and Norwich, and Archbishop of York, who was buried here in 1631; on the south side is a monument in alabaster to the memory of Thomas Coleshill, Esq., an officer in the courts of Edward VI., Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth, and inspector of the customs at the port of London, who died in 1595; and there are several other ancient monuments. St. John's chapel, at Buckhurst Hill, consecrated in April, 1837, is an elegant building, erected at a cost of about £2000, raised by subscription, including a grant of £200 from the Incorporated Society; the site was given by the lady of the manor, Mrs. Hatch Abdy, of Claybury Hall, who died in 1838, and to whom a monument has been erected in the chapel. At Chigwell Row is a place of worship for Independents. In 1629, Archbishop Harsnet founded two free schools, one for the Greek and Latin languages, the other for writing and arithmetic, and endowed them with the inappropriate rectory of Tottington, in Norfolk, now yielding a gross income of £340 per annum, which, however, is charged with the payment of £10, to be distributed in twopenny loaves among twenty-four poor persons who attend the church, and £1 to the parish-clerk for ringing the church bell every morning at six o'clock. William Penn, founder of the colony of Pennsylvania, was educated in the school. Other schools are supported, and there are also almshouses; and several benefactions have been left for the poor of the parish.

CHILBOLTON (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of ANDOVER, hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Andover and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (S. E. by S.) from Andover; containing 359 inhabitants. According to a notice discovered by the present rector among the parochial records, this parish, together with that of Enford, was, in gratitude for deliverance, given to the cathedral of Winchester by Athelstane, who, being defeated by the Danes on their landing on the coast of Sussex, about 930, shut himself up in that place, where, after a fruitless siege, it was agreed to decide the fate of the kingdom by single combat, on which occasion the giant Colbrand, the Danish champion, was vanquished by the renowned Guy, Earl of Warwick. The Andover canal passes through the south-western part of the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 9. 4½, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester: the tithes have been commuted for £617. 10., and the glebe comprises 10 acres. A national school is supported by subscription.

CHILCOMB, a parish, in the union of NEW WINCHESTER, hundred of FAWLEY, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 1½ mile (S. E. by E.) from Winchester; containing 269 inhabitants. The parish is situated in a valley, surrounded on all sides by hills, and comprises 2257a. 16p.: stone is quarried, which is used chiefly for lime. The river Itchen, which is partly navigable, and a canal, run through the parish, nearly in a parallel direction, in their course from Winchester to Southampton; and a road from Winchester to Petersfield passes at a small distance from the village. A fair for general commodities is held on St. Magdalen Hill on the 2nd of Aug., said to have been formerly the largest fair of those continuing only for one day, of any in England. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester: the tithes have been commuted for £161, and the glebe comprises 4½ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church was repewed in 1839, and the churchyard enlarged in 1840.

CHILCOMBE, a parish, in the union of BRIDPORT, hundred of UGGSCOMBE, Bridport division of DORSET, 4¼ miles (E. by S.) from Bridport; containing 53 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 450 acres; the lands are watered by a brook called Bridy: chalk is obtained for manure. The living is a discharged rectory, under sequestration, valued in the king's books at £4. 11. 8., and in the gift of Devises of the Rev. Edward Foyle: the tithes have been commuted for £100. The church is an ancient edifice, and contains a monument to Henry Michell, killed in battle, 1662, aged twenty-one. On the summit of a steep hill to the northward, are vestiges of an entrenchment, inclosing three barrows: from its partaking both of the Roman and Saxon modes of fortification, it is supposed to have been constructed by the former, and extended by the latter. The Knights Hospitallers had possessions here, with a quadrangular mansion, now a farmhouse.

CHILCOMPTON (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of CLUTTON, hundred of CHEWTON, E. division of SOMERSET, 6½ miles (N. N. E.) from Shepton-Mallet; containing 618 inhabitants. The name of the parish is derived from its situation in a cold, though picturesque vale. A clear stream flows through the village, forming at intervals small cascades; and several pleasing villas add to the general neatness of the place. Coal is obtained; imbedded in the red rock in the vale, are found calcareous spar, iron-ore, branches of coral, and a few cornua ammonis; and there are quarries of common stone for rough building and the roads. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £129: the patronage and impropriation belong to Miss Tooker. The church has been recently rebuilt on a larger scale. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. On Blacker's Hill are vestiges of a quadrangular intrenchment, inclosing about fifteen acres; and near it are several tumuli, between which and Broadway are three subterranean cavities, supposed to have been iron pits, but called by the inhabitants "The Fairy Slats."

CHILCOTE, a chapelry, in the parish of CLIFTON-CAMPVILLE, union of TAMWORTH, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Ashby-de-la-Zouch; containing 162 inhabitants. It is annexed to the rectory of Clifton Campville; impropiator, J. Watkins, Esq. A composition in lieu of tithes is received for this and the chapelry of Harleston, amounting together to about £400.

CHILCOTE, a tything, in the parish of ST. CUTHBERT, city and union of WELLS, hundred of WELLS-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 70 inhabitants.

CHILDERDITCH (ALL SAINTS AND ST. FAITH), a parish, in the union of BILLERICAY, hundred of CHAFORD, S. division of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Brentwood; containing 247 inhabitants. It is about $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length, and about one in breadth, and comprises the manors of Childerditch and Tillingham. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; patron and impropiator, Lord Petre. The tithes have been commuted for £172; the glebe comprises nearly 18 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a neat plain edifice, with a tower of brick, surmounted by a shingled spire.

CHILDERLEY (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHESTERTON, county of CAMBRIDGE, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Cambridge; containing 54 inhabitants. After the capture of Charles I. by Cornet Joyce, in 1647, he was conveyed hither by order of Cromwell, who visited him, in company with Fairfax, both of them disavowing all participation in the seizure of his person, and, at the king's request, caused him to be removed to Newmarket. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 9. 2.; net income, £20; patron, N. Calvert, Esq. The church is in ruins.

CHILDREY (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of WANTAGE, county of BERKS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Wantage; containing 546 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the Ickleton Way, part of the Ikeneld-street, and comprises 2719a. 18p., of which about 2151 acres are arable, and the rest pasture; the soil, in the lower lands, is a rich black loam, with a substratum of clay; in the middle lands, a whitish loam, resting on soft freestone; and in the uplands a very shallow light black mould, on a white rubble. The surface is intersected by the Wilts and Berks canal, and, to the north of the church, by the Great Western railway. The village is pleasantly situated, and was for one night the residence of Charles I., who, escorted by his own troop, took up his quarters here. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £33. 14. 7.; net income, £604; patrons, President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1772. The church exhibits some remains of Norman architecture, and contains several ancient monuments, and a curious circular font of lead, divided into compartments, in each of which is the figure of an abbot; the windows have some old stained glass; and there are effigies in brass, inlaid with lead, of William Fyndern and his wife, with the date 1444. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also two schools, a few alms-houses, and other charities.

CHILD'S-ERCALL, county of SALOP.—See ER-CALL, CHILD'S.—And all places having a similar distinguishing prefix will be found under the proper name.

CHILDWALL (ALL SAINTS), a parish, partly in the union of PRESCOT, and partly in that of WEST DERBY, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER; comprising the chapelries of Garston, Hale, Wavertree, and Much Woolton, and the townships of Allerton, Childwall, Halewood, Speke, and Little Woolton; and containing 10,714 inhabitants, of whom 186 are in the township of Childwall, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Liverpool. This parish, which is bounded on the west and south by the river Mersey, comprises by computation 14,870 acres; the soil is various, in the higher lands a light clay upon red rock, in some few parts sandy, and the remainder a reddish marl alternated with blue clay. The Manchester railway passes about a mile to the north of the church. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 11. 8.; net income, £456; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Chester. The church has some early English piers and decorated windows; but the greater portion is of modern date. Jeremiah Markland, the learned critic and classical scholar, was born here in 1693.

CHILFROOM (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of DORCHESTER, hundred of TOLLERFORD, Dorchester division of DORSET, 9 miles (N. W. by W.) from Dorchester; containing 128 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5; net income, £180; patrons, alternately, Lords Poltimore and Sherborne. A school was founded, in 1774, by George Brown, who endowed it with a rent-charge of £21.

CHILGROVE, a tything, in the parish of WEST DEAN, union of WEST BOURNE, hundred of WESTBOURN and SINGLETON, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX; containing 130 inhabitants.

CHILHAM (ST. MARY), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of EAST ASHFORD, hundred of FELBOROUGH, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Canterbury; containing 1165 inhabitants. Chilham Castle is supposed to have been a post of the ancient Britons, and afterwards a military station of the Romans, there being evident proofs of the latter in the discovery of coins, foundations of houses, and other remains. It is of great antiquity, and was a strong fortress and palace of the kings of Kent, till destroyed by the Danes, in the middle of the ninth century; but at the Conquest it was rebuilt by Fulbert de Dover, on whom it had been bestowed. The present stately edifice was erected by Sir Dudley Digges, in 1616, and the interior of the Norman keep made applicable to domestic purposes. On the north-west side are traces of a deep fosse, inclosing an area of eight acres. It is asserted that Cæsar, on his second invasion, defeated the Britons here, who retreated and intrenched themselves in an adjoining wood, where vestiges of their rude and extensive works are still visible; and on a hill at the south-east side of the river, and eastward from the castle is a tumulus, termed Julaber's Grave, supposed to be the place of sepulture of Quintus Laberius Durus, a tribune, who was slain in the conflict. The house, which is in the Elizabethan style, is finely situated on the slope of a hill, commanding an extensive view of the valley of the Stour. On the same eminence, to the north-east of the house, stands the village, protected on one side by the castle and on the other by the church. The market has fallen into disuse; but a cattle fair is held on Nov. 8th. The living is a vicarage, with that of Molash annexed, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8.; net income, £698; patron, J. B. Wildman, Esq., who, with Sir J. Fagg, Bart., is impropiator. The great tithes have been commuted for £1000, and the vicarial for £600; the glebe contains 25 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a spacious cruciform structure, exhibiting portions in various styles, whereof the early English predominates; it contains several monuments, the principal of which are, a group in marble, by Chantrey, considered one of his finest works; the mausoleum of the Colebrooks, erected in 1755, on the site of an ancient chantry chapel; that of Sir Dudley Digges, of earlier date, with his splendid monument in the centre; and a monument to the memory of his sister, Dame Margaret Palmer. There is a school endowed with funds producing £12. 11. 6. per annum.

CHILHAMPTON, a chapelry, in the parish of SOUTH NEWTON, union of WILTON, hundred of BRANCH and DOLE, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N.) from Wilton.

CHILLENDEEN (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of EASTRY, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Wingham; containing 137 inhabitants. The parish, which comprises only 250 acres, chiefly arable, is the smallest in the county. A fair for pedlery, &c., is held on Whit-Monday. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £130. The church is a small ancient edifice, with a Norman arch at the entrance.

CHILLERTON, a hamlet, partly in the parish of WOOTTON, liberty of EAST MEDINA, but chiefly in that of Carisbrooke, liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight incorporation and division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 244 inhabitants.

CHILLESFORD (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union and hundred of PLOMESGATE, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Orford; containing 220 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 1865 acres. A branch of the Ore, called Butley Creek, runs up to the place. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 3. 4., and in the patronage of Mrs. E. S. Smear: the tithes have been commuted for £287. 8. 7., and the glebe contains 32a. 5p.

CHILLINGHAM (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of GLENDALE, E. division of GLENDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing 459 inhabitants, of whom 217 are in the township of Chillingham, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Wooler. The parish is situated on the river Till, which flows through the centre of it, in a direction from south to north, and falls into the Tweed at Tilmouth; it comprises, including the townships of Hebburn and Newtown, 4925a. 3r. 25p., of which 1794 acres are arable, 2296 pasture, and 835 woodland; the surface is in many parts richly embellished; the soil is various, but the greater portion exceedingly fertile: coal and limestone are found, whereof the latter is quarried for burning into-lime; and there are quarries of stone for building and other purposes. The parish belongs to the Earl of Tankerville, whose seat, Chillingham Castle, is a very ancient structure; the north-east tower dates back to the time of Henry III.: it probably became dilapidated during the war of the Roses, and the centre was rebuilt in the reign of James I. In the park is a breed of wild cattle, the only one in the island, and supposed to be the same as were found before the time of the Romans; the animals are white, with a tinge of red on the ears. The living is a vicarage, as to the townships of Chillingham and Newtown, and a rectory as to Hebburn, and is valued in the king's books at £4; patron, Bishop of Durham; impropiator of the remainder of the great tithes, Earl of Tankerville. The tithes have been commuted for £384, and the glebe comprises nearly 2 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is an ancient and small edifice, with a Norman doorway; in the chancel is a richly-sculptured monument, temp. Henry VII., to Sir Ralph Grey, whose father was killed at the battle of Towton, and whose grandfather was beheaded by Henry V., with Lord Cobham, after the Lollard outburst. From him descended Mary, only daughter of Ford, Earl of Tankerville and Baron Grey, of Wark, and wife of Charles, 2nd Baron Ossulston, and 1st (renewed title) Earl of Tankerville, 1714. A parochial school, built in 1835, by subscription, is under the controul of the National Society. On an eminence eastward from Chillingham Park is a double intrenchment, called Ros Castle, supposed to have been a British fort; in the park is an ancient camp; and there are tumuli, formed of irregular heaps of stones, out of which urns containing human ashes have been dug. At Newtown is an ancient cross, termed the Hurle Stone, twelve feet high.

CHILLINGTON (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of CHARD, hundred of SOUTH PETHERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Crewkerne; containing 321 inhabitants. It is situated in a beautiful valley, to the north of the great London road, and comprises 882a. 1r. 1p. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £60; patron and impropiator, Earl Poullett, whose tithes have been commuted for £237.

CHILLINGTON, a liberty, in the parish of BREWOOD, union of PENKRIDGE, E. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD.

CHILMARK (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of TISBURY, hundred of DUNWORTH, Hindon and S. divisions of the county of WILTS, 12 miles (W. by N.) from Salisbury; containing, with the tything of Rudge, 593 inhabitants. The parish, which is situated on the ancient Ikeneld-street, formerly belonged to the abbey of Wilton, and was granted by Henry VIII. to William Herbert and his wife, sister to Catharine Parr, and is still the property of their descendants, the Earls of Pembroke. It comprises 3032*a.* 3*r.* 14*p.*, and contains clay of excellent quality for bricks and for pottery. The celebrated quarries of freestone, from which was raised the stone for the erection of Salisbury cathedral, have almost fallen into disuse, being superseded by the Bath stone, which is more easily wrought. The river Nadder, and several of its tributaries, flow through the parish, which is also intersected by the Wilts and Berks canal. A fair, chiefly for cheese and horses, is held on the 31st of July. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 13. 4., and in the gift of the Earl of Pembroke: the tithes have been commuted for £411, and the glebe comprises 24 acres. The church is cruciform, with a tower rising from the intersection, surmounted by a handsome spire; some parts of the building are in the early English style, others of later date. There is a school, supported by the Earl of Pembroke and the rector. This is the birthplace of John de Chilmarke, a celebrated mathematician and philosophical writer in the thirteenth century.

CHILSON, a tything, in the parish of CHARLBURY, union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 5¼ miles (S. by W.) from Chipping-Norton; containing, with the tything of Pudlicott, 287 inhabitants.

CHILSWELL, a liberty, in the parish of CUMNER, union of ABINGDON, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Abingdon; containing 12 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel.

CHILTERN, WILTS.—See CHITTERN.

CHILTHORNE-DOMER, (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of YEOVIL, hundred of STONE, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (N. W.) from Yeovil; containing 291 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 1395 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £5. 7. 1.; net income, £235; patron and incumbent, Rev. John Bayly. The glebe contains 16 acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

CHILTINGTON, EAST, a village, in the parish of WESTMESTON, union of CHAILEY, hundred of STREET, rape of LEWES, E. division of SUSSEX, 5 miles (N. W. by N.) from Lewes; containing 271 inhabitants. Here is a church, which is subordinate to the mother church, and is a neat edifice, in the later English style. A school was endowed in 1797, by John Marten, with a rent-charge of £4. 6. 8., and is further supported by a bequest of the Rev. W. H. Campion, and by subscription. A school-house was built, in 1836, at the expense of J. M. Cripps, Esq.

CHILTINGTON, WEST, a parish, in the union of THAKEHAM, partly in the hundred of EAST EASWRITH, rape of BRAMBER, but chiefly in that of WEST EASWRITH, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, 9 miles (E. S. E.) from Petworth; containing 747 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 3444 acres, of which 2817 are arable; a portion towards the South Downs is uninclosed common; the surface is flat, but is intersected by a ridge of considerable elevation, extending for nearly half a mile, and commanding good views. The soil near the downs is sandy, resting on a substratum of iron-stone; towards the wilds, the soil is a good mould, favourable for the growth of corn and timber; on the steep banks which overhang the roads, are found circular nodules of blue limestone imbedded in clay; and in the lower parts are some pits of Sussex marble of fine quality. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 16. 10½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Abergavenny: the tithes have been commuted for £770, and a rent-charge of £19. 10. is paid to the rector of Greatham, and one of £6 to another improprator; the glebe comprises 12 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a handsome structure, chiefly in the early English style, with later additions, and some more ancient details; it has a spire rising from the centre, between the nave and chancel, and a highly-enriched Norman arch at the north entrance. A school was founded, in 1634, by William Smyth, Esq., who endowed it with land producing £47 per annum.

CHILTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WANTAGE, hundred of COMPTON, county of BERKS, 3¼ miles (N.) from East Ilsley; containing 309 inhabitants, and comprising 1374*a.* 2*r.* 36*p.* The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 8. 4., and in the gift of the family of Heneage; net income, £400.

CHILTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of THAME, hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3½ miles (N. by W.) from Thame; containing, with the hamlet of Easington, 364 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, net income, £67; patron and improprator, Charles Spencer Ricketts, Esq. The church contains some fine monuments to the Croke family, of whom Sir George Croke, Knt., the celebrated lawyer, famous for his determined opposition to the tax of ship-money, in the reign of Charles I., was born and lies buried here. Nicholas Almond, in 1628, gave property, now producing £26. 16. 6. per annum, for distribution among the poor; and there is a small fund for apprenticing children.

CHILTON, a township, in the parish of MERRINGTON, union of SEDGFIELD, S. E. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 9 miles (S. by E.) from Durham; containing 189 inhabitants. The village of Great Chilton is situated about a mile to the north-east of Rushyford, and occupies a hilly region: it formed part of the forfeitures of William de la Pole, Earl of Suffolk, in 1388. There is a branch of the Clarence railway from the Durham branch, about three furlongs in length. The tithes have been commuted for £234. 19., of which £166. 19. are payable to the Dean of Durham, and £68 to the vicar of the parish.

CHILTON, a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of BABERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, 1½ mile (N. E. by E.) from Sudbury; containing 98 inhabitants. It comprises 979*a.* 1*r.* 8*p.* The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 5½., and in the gift of W. H. Windham, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £280, of which £80 belong to the rector of Great Waldingfield; and there are nearly 26 acres of glebe.

CHILTON, or CHIPLEY, a hamlet, in the parish of CLARE, union and hundred of RISBRIDGE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 1 mile (W. by N.) from Clare; containing 150 inhabitants. A small priory of Augustine canons, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, was founded here; but the income not exceeding £10 per annum, and the buildings becoming dilapidated, it was given, in 1468, to the Dean and Chapter of the College of Stoke: the remains have been converted into a dwelling-house. There was also a chapel.

CHILTON-CANDOVER, county of SOUTHAMPTON.
—See CANDOVER, CHILTON.

CHILTON-CANTILO (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of YEOVIL, forming a detached portion of the hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BARWICK, and COKER, W. division, but locally in that of HORETHORNE, E. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Yeovil; containing, with the chapelry of Nether Adber, 134 inhabitants. It comprises 616 acres, and is washed, on its western boundary, by the river Yeo. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 11. 5½.; net income, £260; patron, John Bragge, Esq.

CHILTON-FOLIATT (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of HUNGERFORD, partly in the hundred of KINBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, but chiefly in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and N. divisions of WILTS, 2¼ miles (N. W. by W.) from Hungerford; containing, with the hamlet of Leverton, in Berks, 727 inhabitants. The parish derives its name from the river Chilt, a small stream by which it is intersected. Here is the residence of Lieut.-Col. Popham, which is remarkable for its antiquity and elegance of style, and has attached to it a spacious Roman Catholic chapel. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 8. 9.; net income, £994; patron, Lieut.-Col. Popham. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. In 1770, Roger and Elizabeth Ipanswick founded a school, with an endowment now producing £20 per annum, to which Walter Bigg, in 1772, bequeathed £100.

CHILTON-TRINITY (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of NORTH PETHERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 1½ mile (N. by W.) from Bridgwater; containing, with the hamlet of Huntstill, 74 inhabitants. This place is of great antiquity, and formerly gave name to a hundred, designated Chilton-Trinitatis. The navigable river Parret flows on the eastern side of the parish; and the neighbourhood contains a great quantity of coal, lying beneath a stony stratum, here called wark, on which, when split, impressions of fern and other plants are visible; much of the coal is tinged with sulphur, and in one mine a considerable quantity of lead-ore was found adhering to it. The living is a discharged rectory, united to the vicarage of Bridgwater, and valued in the king's books at £7. 0. 2½.; it is in the patronage of the Crown. The tithes of the parish, exclusive of the hamlets of Idstock and Beer, have been commuted for £193. 10. 6., and the glebe contains upwards of 5½ acres. The church is a neat structure, covered with lead, with a tower rebuilt in 1728.

CHILTON-UPON-POLDON, a chapelry, in the parish of MOORLINCH, union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of WHITLEY, W. division of SOMERSET, 5¼ miles (E. N. E.) from Bridgwater; containing 425 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £19; patron and incumbent, Rev. H. J. Bowden; impropiator, Rev.

R. J. Luscombe. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £80, and the vicarial for £78.

CHILVERS-COTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of NUNEATON, Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, ¾ of a mile (S. W.) from Nuneaton; containing, with the hamlet of Griff, 2508 inhabitants. In the reign of Henry II., Ralph de Sudley founded an Augustine priory at Erdbury, in this parish, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £122. 8. 6. The site was granted, in the reign of Elizabeth, to Sir Edmund Anderson, who destroyed the monastic buildings, and with the materials erected a spacious quadrangular mansion, which, in 1586, he exchanged with John Newdigate, Esq., of Harefield, in the county of Middlesex, for the manor of Harefield. The ancient house was re-modelled by the late Sir Roger Newdigate, in the later style of English architecture; the apartments are spacious and richly ornamented, and the park is pleasingly varied. The parish comprises by measurement 4180 acres: the manufacture of ribbons is carried on extensively; and there are some coal-works in the parish, which is intersected by the Coventry canal, the rateable annual value of the works being £798, and of the canal property £1022. The river Anker bounds the parish on the east, and it is crossed by the road from Nuneaton to Coventry. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £106. The church has been recently enlarged, and 375 free sittings have been provided. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and two national schools are supported by funds given by the late Sir Roger Newdigate. Adjoining the precincts of the park is an ancient residence of the Knights Templars, granted to them by Ralph de Sudley.

CHILWELL, a hamlet, in the parish of ATENBOROUGH, union of SHARDLOW, S. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 4¾ miles (S. W. by W.) from Nottingham; containing 772 inhabitants, many of whom are employed in frame-work knitting and bobbin-net making. Here are two endowed almshouses.

CHILWORTH, a hamlet, in the parish of GREAT MILTON, union of THAME, hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 3½ miles (W. N. W.) from Tetsworth; containing 93 inhabitants.

CHILWORTH, a parish, in the union of SOUTH STONEHAM, hundred of MAINSBRIDGE, Southampton and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (S. E. by E.) from Romsey; containing 177 inhabitants. It is pleasantly situated, and comprises about 1200 acres, of which 200 are wood and meadow, and the rest chiefly arable; the soil is peculiarly favourable to the growth of oak, which is produced in luxuriance. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £53; patron and impropiator, John Fleming, Esq. The church is a small, but neat and beautiful, edifice, rebuilt, a few years since, by the late patron, P. Serle, Esq. There is a school supported by Mr. Fleming.

CHILWORTH, SURREY.—See MARTHA (St.).

CHIMNELL, a township, in the parish of WHITCHURCH, Whitchurch division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, 1¾ mile (N. N. E.) from Whitchurch; containing 16 inhabitants.

CHIMNEY, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of Bampton, union of WITNEY, county of OXFORD, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Witney; containing 36 inhabitants. The river Isis flows past the village.

CHINEHAM, a tything, in the parish of MONKS-SHERBORNE, union and hundred of BASINGSTOKE, Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Basingstoke; containing 34 inhabitants.

CHINGFORD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of EPPING, hundred of WALTHAM, S. division of ESSEX, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from London; containing 971 inhabitants. This parish lies on the borders of Epping Forest, in which is a house called Queen Elizabeth's Lodge, where the courts under the forest laws are held. It is separated on the west from the parish of Edmonton, in the county of Middlesex, by the river Lea, and comprises about 2459 acres of good land, whereof 1505 are pasture and meadow, 462 arable, and 492 woodland, of which last 142 are inclosed. The surface is diversified, rising in some parts to a considerable elevation, and commanding richly varied views; and from its situation on the borders of Epping Forest, and the number of handsome mansions in its vicinity, abounds with picturesque scenery. The name appears to have been derived from a ford over the river Lea, called the King's Ford; and the principal manor, which belonged to Edward the Confessor, was given by that sovereign to the Cathedral of St. Paul, London, from which it was separated at the Reformation. In the manor-house, now the residence of the Rev. R. B. Heathcote, is the oak table on which James I. is said to have knighted the sirloin of beef on his return from hunting; also an oak panel, supposed to have belonged to the coach in which Queen Elizabeth rode to return thanks after the defeat of the Spanish Armada. A pleasure-fair is held on Whit-Monday. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 5. 5.; patron and incumbent, Rev. Mr. Heathcote, whose tithes have been commuted for £560, and whose glebe comprises 18 acres. The church is a small ancient building of flint and stone, with a low tower, and in the later English style. In a corner are deposited the remains of Mr. and Mrs. Ramsden, who gave the pulpit, a very handsome one, and were buried about 1590: he was an officer in the household of Queen Elizabeth, and left bequests to this and several adjoining parishes. Sir John Sylvester, recorder of the city of London, and the late Col. Cooke, formerly of the Bengal army, with his lady, are interred here; and there are several very old tablets. National schools are supported by subscription.

CHINLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of GLOSSOP, union of CHAPEL-EN-LE-FRITH, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Chapel-en-le-Frith; containing, with Brownside and Bugsworth, 996 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £63. 9., and the vicarial for £11. 5. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school has been built.

CHINNOCK, EAST (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of YEOVIL, hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BARWICK, and COKER, W. division of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Yeovil; containing 735 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Yeovil to Crewkerne, and comprises by measurement 1350 acres. The manufacture of sail-cloth is carried on to a considerable extent; and stone is quarried, chiefly for rough walls. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 7. 8 $\frac{1}{4}$., and in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £140; the impropriation belongs to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; the glebe comprises 45 acres. The church has been recently enlarged, and now contains 450 sittings, of which 350 are free. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Property producing about £60 a year is applied to charitable purposes. About a mile west of the church is a spring of brackish water, from which salt may be extracted.

CHINNOCK, MIDDLE (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of YEOVIL, hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BARWICK, and COKER, W. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Crewkerne; containing 222 inhabitants. It comprises 468a. 3r. 31p., of which about 214 acres are arable, and 254 pasture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 9. 7., and in the gift of the Earl of Ilchester: the tithes have been commuted for £112. 12., and the glebe contains 39 acres. The church, which has a Norman arch over the southern entrance, has been considerably enlarged by subscription, aided by a grant from the Incorporated Society.

CHINNOCK, WEST (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of YEOVIL, hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BARWICK, and COKER, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (N. E. by N.) from Crewkerne; containing 561 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the rectory of Chisleborough: the tithes have been commuted for £160. 4. 8., and the glebe contains 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church has been rebuilt. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CHINNOR (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of WYCOMBE, hundred of LEWKNOR, county of OXFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Watlington; containing, with the liberty of Henton, 1308 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 0. 5., and in the patronage of Sir James Musgrave, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £701. 12., and the glebe contains upwards of 15 acres, to which there is a glebe-house; a rent-charge of £50 is paid to the Dean and Canons of St. George's, Windsor. The church is an elegant structure, partly in the early and partly in the decorated English style, with an embattled tower strengthened by buttresses; it contains some brasses and interesting monuments. The Roman Ikeneld-street enters the county at this place, and, crossing the Thames, points towards Goring.

CHIPCHASE, with GUNNERTON, a township, in the parish of CHOLLERTON, union of HEXHAM, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9 miles (N. N. W.) from Hexham; containing 372 inhabitants. Odonel Umfraville had possession of this place in the reign of Henry II.; and in 1272, it was the seat of Peter de Insula, from whom it passed to the Lisles, and subsequently to the Heron family, of whom Sir Harry Heron sold the estate to George Allgood, Esq., and from him it was purchased by the Reeds, in 1732. Chipchase Castle, a large and beautiful structure, stands upon a lofty eminence, at the foot of which flows the North Tyne. Of the ancient building only a tower remains; it has a projecting battlement resting on corbels, and has openings for missiles; some tattered fragments of paintings on the walls are exceedingly curious.

A private chapel, in which the vicar performs divine service four times in the year, was rebuilt by John Reed, Esq., in 1732, on the lawn of the castle.

CHIPPENHAM (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of NEWMARKET, hundred of STAPLOE, county of CAMBRIDGE, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Newmarket; containing 666 inhabitants. William de Mandeville, Earl of Essex, gave this manor to the society of Knights Hospitallers, who fixed a subordinate establishment here. Charles I., during the civil war, enjoyed the diversion of bowling at Chippenham Park, the seat of Sir William Russel; and George I. was entertained here by Admiral Russel, Oct. 4th, 1717. About the middle of the seventeenth century the estate was possessed by Sir Francis Russel, Bart., whose daughter married the fourth son of the Protector Cromwell. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 12. 6.; patron and impropiator, John Thorpe, Esq.: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £325, and the glebe contains 18 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church was rebuilt by means of a grant of indulgences, shortly after its destruction by fire, in the fifteenth century. A school was founded in 1714, by the Earl of Orford, with an endowment of £20 per annum.

CHIPPENHAM (St. ANDREW), a borough, market-town, and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, 33 miles (N. W. by N.) from Salisbury, and 93 (W.) from London; comprising the tythings of Allington, Nethermore, and Stanley with Studley, and the chapelry of Tytherton-

Seal and Arms.

Lucas; and containing 5438 inhabitants, of whom 1875 are in the borough. This place, which derives its name from the Saxon Cyppanham, "a market-town," was of considerable importance during the heptarchy, and is supposed to have been the residence of the West Saxon kings. Ethelwolf, on his return from an excursion against the Welsh, in 853, remained for some time at the place, where he celebrated the marriage of his daughter Ethelswitha with Burhred, King of Mercia. In the reign of Alfred, the Danes, who, after their defeat, had engaged by treaty to quit the kingdom, retreated to this town, of which they obtained possession by treachery; and that monarch, after the dispersion of his army, was compelled to seek an asylum in the cottage of a neat-herd. On their subsequent defeat by Alfred, the Danes again took refuge here, where the treaty between that monarch and the Danish prince Guthrum was negotiated. The town is pleasantly situated on the side of a hill, on the south bank of the river Avon, which here expands into a noble sheet of water, over which, terminating the western extremity of the principal street, is a handsome stone bridge of 22 arches, for the repair of which, and of a stone causeway of nearly three miles in length, a considerable estate is vested in the corporation. It consists of one spacious street, half a mile in length, and well paved, containing many respectable houses, and of several smaller streets: it is lighted with gas, and well supplied with water from the river, by which it is bounded on three sides; and in 1834, an act for lighting, watching, paving, and improving the town was obtained. A Literary and Scientific Institution, and an Harmonic Society consisting of more than 200 members, have been lately formed. The woollen-manufacture, consisting chiefly of the finer broad cloths, and kerseymeres, formerly flourished to a considerable extent; but at present there is only one factory. There are a few grist-mills and tanneries; also a silk-manufactory; and the town is benefited by the trade arising from its situation as a thoroughfare on the road to Bath and Bristol. The Wilts and Berks canal passes close to it, and the Great Western railway, on which is a station here, passes within a quarter of a mile of the market-place. The market is on Friday; fairs are held on May 17th, June 22nd, Oct. 29th, and Dec. 11th, for horses, cattle, and sheep; and there is also a monthly market for the sale of cattle and cheese. A new market-house has lately been built.

Chippenham is a BOROUGH by prescription: the corporation, under the charter of Queen Mary, which, after its surrender to Charles II., was renewed in the reign of James II., consisted of a bailiff, and twelve burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk, sub-bailiff, and subordinate officers; but, by the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, the government is now vested in a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, with a town-clerk and others: the county magistrates have jurisdiction in the town. It first sent members to parliament in the reign of Edward I., and made two returns in the reign of Edward II., and four in that of Edward III., from which period it discontinued till the 2nd of Richard II.; after the 12th of that reign it again ceased to make any return till the first of Henry VI., since which time it has regularly sent two members. The right of election was formerly in the resident burgage-holders, but, by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the franchise was extended to the £10 householders of an enlarged district, comprising 6710 acres: the mayor is returning officer. The petty-sessions for the division are held here; and a court of requests, for the recovery of debts under 40s., is held on the Monday in every sixth week. The town-hall, market-house, and shambles are very inconveniently situated, and it has long been in contemplation to remove them; but this desirable object has not yet been carried into effect. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 19. 4.; net income, £284; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. The church is a spacious ancient building, exhibiting portions in different styles of English architecture, of which the tower and spire are in the early style; it contains several interesting monuments. At Tytherton-Lucas is a chapel of ease; and there are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists; also schools, supported by subscription. Various bequests have been left, both for the benefit of the poor and for the repair of the causeway; and a savings' bank was established in 1822. The union of Chippenham comprises 29 parishes or places, and contains a population of 23,297. At the distance of about two miles is the site of Stanley Abbey, founded in 1154, by the Empress Matilda and Henry II., who removed hither a society of Cistercian monks, established at Lockswell three years previously; its revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was estimated at £222. 19. 4.: there are no visible remains, but fragments are occasionally found. The abbey of Lacock is within four miles of the town; it came into the possession of the Talbot family, who made it their family seat. Monkton, the name of an estate on the north bank of the river, seems to indicate the remote existence of some religious establishment, of which no vestige or historical account remains. The ancient forest of Chippenham and Pewsham has been destroyed, although the latter place is still called "the Forest;" the road leading to it from the town is named Wood-lane. There are two chalybeate springs in the parish, which were formerly in great repute; one of them is now occasionally used, but the other is entirely closed up.

CHIPPERFIELD, a hamlet, in the parish of KINGS-LANGLEY, union of HEMEL-HEMPSTEAD, hundred of DACORUM, county of HERTFORD; containing 569 inhabitants.

CHIPPING (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of CLITHEROE, Lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER; containing, with the township of Thornley with Wheatley, 1675 inhabitants, of whom 1168 are in the township of Chipping, 12 miles (N. E. by N.) from Preston. The parish comprises 8763*a.* 1*r.* 26*p.*, of which about 836 acres are arable, 5439 meadow and pasture, 90 woods and plantations, and a great part of the rest common and waste; the township of Chipping contains 5582*a.* 2*r.* 24*p.* The soil is rather light, in some parts inclining to moor and peat, and the lands are watered by two small rivulets, called Lond and Chipping brooks; limestone abounds, and is burnt in considerable quantities for manure. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £36. 13. 4.; net income, £120; patron, Bishop of Chester, as appropriator of the rectory, which is valued at £24. 16. 5½. There is a place of worship for Roman Catholics. A free school was established, in 1616, by the trustees of John Brabin, Esq., with an endowment in land producing £60 per annum; and there are three almshouses, founded by the same trust, for six poor women.

CHIPPING-CAMPDEN.—See CAMPDEN, CHIPPING.—And all places having a similar distinguishing prefix will be found under the proper name.

CHIPPINGHURST, a hamlet, in the parish of CUDDESDEN, union of HEADINGTON, hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 7¼ miles (N. by W.) from Bensington; containing 19 inhabitants.

CHIPSTABLE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WELLINGTON, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (W. by S.) from Wiveliscombe; containing 389 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Taunton to Barnstaple, through Bampton, and comprises nearly 2200 acres: the meadows are irrigated by the waters flowing from Hedon and Byballs Hills, causing the growth of a luxuriant herbage; and the river Tone runs through the parish, but it is here only a small stream. Stone of the greywacke kind is quarried for the repair of the roads. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 1. 8., and in the gift of James Templer, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £275, and the glebe consists of 35 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church, with the exception of the tower, which is handsome, is in a very dilapidated state, through age. There is a parochial school. The remains of a Roman encampment may be seen.

CHIPSTEAD (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union and Second division of the hundred of REIGATE, E. division of SURREY, 2¾ miles (N. by E.) from Gattton; containing 666 inhabitants. The London and Brighton railway passes a little to the east of the church. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 13. 11½.; net income, £267; patron, Col. Hylton Jolliffe. The church has been thoroughly repaired and enlarged; on the north side is a fine Norman arch. Here is a school, endowed by Mary Stephens, in 1746, with land producing £70 per annum.

CHIRBURY (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the hundred of CHIRBURY, S. division of SALOP, 3¼ miles (E. N. E.) from Montgomery; containing 1593 inhabitants, of whom 278 are in the township of Chirbury. This is a place of considerable antiquity, and was distinguished during the heptarchy for its stately castle, erected on the bank of the river Severn, by Ethelfreda, Countess of Mercia, to check the incursions of the Welsh. A priory of Black canons, originally founded at Snede, by Robert de Boulers, in the beginning of the reign of Henry III., was, in the eleventh of that king's reign, removed to this spot, where it continued to flourish till the Dissolution, when its revenue was returned at £87. 7. 4., and the site was given to Edward Hopton. The parish, which is situated on the road from Montgomery to Welshpool, comprises by measurement 10,648 acres; the largest stream is the Camblad. On the borders are some lead-mines; stone of a greyish green colour, and of very hard quality, is quarried for building and ornamental uses; and white spar is found at Wotherton, of which great quantities are shipped to America. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 6. 8.; net income, £179; patrons, the Bishop of Lichfield, (as ex officio visiter of Shrewsbury grammar school,) Viscount Clive, J. A. Lloyd, Esq., Sir A. V. Corbet, Bart., and R. A. Slaney, Esq., as trustees. The impropriation is vested in the governors of Shrewsbury school, and furnishes its chief endowment; the tithes have been commuted for £1000. The church, the nave of the ancient priory, is in the early English style, with a square tower, surmounted by open battlements, and crowned with eight pinnacles. A chapel has recently been built, containing 280 sittings, of which 249 are free, the Incorporated Society having granted £150 in aid of the expense. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. An endowment in land, which is let for £95, was given in 1675, by Edward Lewis, for the maintenance of a schoolmaster, who has £20 per annum, the residue, after repairs, &c., being given to poor widows: The place confers the title of Baron on the Earls of Powis.

CHIRDON, a township, in the parish of GREYSTEAD, union of BELLINGHAM, N. W. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Bellingham; containing 60 inhabitants. The township comprises an area of 5361 acres, and extends along the east side of the Chirdon burn, which has its source on the borders of Cumberland, and falls into the North Tyne about a mile to the east of Greystead.

CHIRTON, a township, in the parish, borough, and union of TYNEMOUTH, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 1 mile (W. S. W.) from North Shields; containing 4360 inhabitants. This place comprises 1795 acres, and abounds in coal; and the village, which forms the western suburb of North Shields, has greatly increased in extent and population, owing chiefly, to the extension of the coal-works, from which tram-roads have been formed to the river Tyne. The Percy-main colliery here consists of three pits, of which one is the Percy Old Pit, opened in 1801, when the shaft was sunk 12 fathoms to the high-main seam, and produced coal of the first quality; the same shaft was again sunk, in 1830, to the seam below, 40 fathoms deeper than the former, and a secondary coal was obtained. The second, or Howdon Pit, was opened in 1806, and the shaft sunk to the depth of 135 fathoms, the coal produced being also of the best description; and the third, or Flatworth Pit, was opened in 1818, its greatest depth being 156 fathoms; the coal is sold in the London market under the respective names of the "Bewicke and Craster," and the "Percy Bensham" coal: in the colliery are three large pumping-engines, one of which is of 250 horse power, and draws 75 gallons of water at a stroke. In the township are also iron-foundries on a large scale, for the manufacture of steam-engines, and various kinds of machinery. Waterville House, situated here, the seat of George Rippon, Esq., was erected upon the site of the old Roman station of Blake Chesters, and contains a rich and extensive collection of ancient carvings, coins, glass, and other antiquities. Chirton House, now the property of E. J. Collingwood, Esq., and residence of the Rev. Christopher Reed, Vicar of Tynemouth, was once the seat of Admiral Lord Collingwood, the celebrated naval commander and distinguished negotiator, who was born in 1748 at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and after a long service in the cause of his country, displaying the utmost energy and talent, died in 1810, when his remains were brought to England and honoured with a public funeral in St. Paul's Cathedral. Chirton Hall, the former seat of the dukes of Argyle, is now in ruins. There is a burying-ground belonging to the Jews.

CHISELHURST (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of BROMLEY, hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 11 miles (S. E.) from London; containing 1792 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 3. 6½.; net income, £487; patron, Bishop of Rochester. The church is built of flint, with a shingled spire. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school is endowed with £15 per annum, and there are two schools for girls, supported by bequests and donations. In 1680, Thomas Philpott made a bequest for building six almshouses at Eltham, two of them to be inhabited by poor persons of this parish. Sir Nicholas Bacon was a native of Chiselhurst: here also was born, in 1500, Sir Francis Walsingham, secretary of state to Queen Elizabeth; and at this place, in 1623, died Camden, the celebrated antiquary, from whom Camden Place, in the parish (whence Lord Chancellor Pratt took the title of Baron, and which now confers the title of Marquess on his descendants), derives its name. Viscount Sydney enjoys the title of Baron Sydney of Chiselhurst, conferred in the year 1783.

CHISENBURY, a tything, in the parish of ENFORD, union of PEWSEY, hundred of ELSTUB and EVERLEY, Everley and Pewsey, and S. divisions of WILTS; containing 149 inhabitants.

CHISENBURY-DE-LA-FOLLY, a tything, in the parish of NETHER AVON, union of PEWSEY, hundred of ELSTUB and EVERLEY, Everley and Pewsey, and S. divisions of WILTS, 9 miles (W. by N.) from Ludgershall; containing 42 inhabitants. It forms part of the endowment of the prebend of Chute and Chisenbury, in the Cathedral of Salisbury.

CHISHALL, GREAT (St. Swithin), a parish, in the union of ROYSTON, hundred of UTTLESFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 5 miles (E.) from Royston; containing 466 inhabitants. It comprises 2480a. 1r. 38p., and forms part of a district which also includes the parish of Little Chishall, separated by a water-course, called Cumberton, from the county of Hertford. The village is situated on a hill of considerable elevation, commanding a fine view of the surrounding district, which is highly cultivated, and enriched with woodland scenery. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £173; patron and impropiator, J. Wilkes, Esq.: the tithes of Great and Little Chishall were commuted for land and corn-rents, in 1811. The church is an ancient edifice, with a tower surmounted by a small spire.

CHISHALL, LITTLE (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of ROYSTON, hundred of UTTLESFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 5½ miles (E. by S.) from Royston; containing 96 inhabitants. It consists chiefly of low lands, and comprises 1167a. 1r. 37p., of which about 1058 acres are arable, 24 pasture, and 85 woodland; the soil consists of clay and chalk in some parts, and in others, especially the flat portions, it is a dry light gravel. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Haydon, and valued in the king's books at £14. 10. The church is a small but lofty edifice of great antiquity, with a porch of freestone, and a tower partly of stone and partly of wood. John de Chishal, or Chishull, Bishop of London, who died in 1279, took his name from the place.

CHISLEBOROUGH (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of YEOVIL, hundred of HOUNDENBOROUGH, BARWICK, and COKER, W. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Crewkerne; containing 540 inhabitants. It is intersected by the river Parret, and comprises about 730 acres, of which the surface is hilly and the soil sandy. A fair for horses, cattle, and toys, is held on the last Tuesday in October. The living is a rectory, with that of West Chinnock annexed, valued in the king's books at £14. 5. 7½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Ilchester: the tithes have been commuted for £246. 17., and the glebe comprises 36 acres.

CHISLEDON (Holy Cross), a parish, in the union of HIGHWORTH and SWINDON, hundred of KINGSBRIDGE, Swindon and N. divisions of WILTS, 3½ miles (S. E.) from Swindon; containing, with the tythings of Badbury and Hodson, 1176 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 8. 9.; net income, £173; patron and impropiator, T. Calley, Esq. Two schools are supported by subscription.

CHISLEHAMPTON (St. Katherine), a parish, in the union of ABINGDON, hundred of DORCHESTER, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (N. by W.) from Bensington; containing 153 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the Thame, comprises 901*a.* 39*p.*; the surface is varied, rising into hills in some parts, and being in others level; the soil is clayey but fertile. Chislehampton Lodge is a handsome residence, in the grounds around which is one of the largest and finest elm-trees in the county. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £58; patron and impropiator, Charles Peers, Esq. The livings of Chislehampton and Stadhampton have just been united. There is a school with an endowment of £5 per annum, by the late Mrs. Peers.

CHISLET (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BLEAN, hundred of BLEANGATE, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, 7 miles (N. E.) from Canterbury; containing 1097 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £29. 19. 9½.; net income, £231; patron and appropriator, Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is in the early English style: the parsonage-house was rebuilt by the present incumbent, in 1834. In 1811, the archbishop demised certain land, which lets for £40 per annum, for the education of children; the income is applied to a national school.

CHISWICK (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of BRENTFORD, Kensington division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 4½ miles (W. by S.) from London; containing 5811 inhabitants. This place is pleasantly situated on the margin of the Thames, to the left of the great western road from London, and contains many elegant seats belonging to the nobility and gentry, the principal of which, Devonshire House, is adorned on each side with fine rows of cedars: in this mansion died the Rt. Hon. Charles James Fox, in 1806, and the Rt. Hon. George Canning, in 1827. Here are the extensive gardens belonging to the Horticultural Society of London, incorporated by charter in 1808, for the improvement of horticulture in all its branches. The living is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London, (the appropriators,) valued in the king's books at £9. 18. 4.; net income, £601. In the churchyard are some ancient tombs, and a monument to the memory of Hogarth, the painter. In 1719, Lady Capel left an endowment of £39 per annum, for teaching boys and girls; two national schools are maintained by legacies and subscription; and a Lancasterian school is partly supported by contributions.

CHISWORTH, a township, in the parish and union of GLOSSOP, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 9 miles (N. N. W.) from Chapel-le-Frith; containing 532 inhabitants.

CHITHURST, a parish, in the union of MIDHURST, hundred of DUMPFORD, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, 3¾ miles (W. N. W.) from Midhurst; containing 232 inhabitants. It is intersected by the river Rother. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Iping: the church is in the early English style.

CHITTERN (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WARMINSTER, hundred of HEYTESBURY, Warminster and S. divisions of WILTS, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Heytesbury; containing 403 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Amesbury to Bristol, and comprises by measurement 4288 acres; the lands are watered by several springs, which, during part of the year, rise in the parish and neighbourhood, and, uniting, form a considerable stream. The living is a discharged vicarage, to which is united the vicarage of Chittern St. Mary, valued in the king's books at £7. 0. 10.; net income, £319; patrons, alternately, the Bishop and Dean and Chapter of Salisbury; impropiator of All Saints', the family of Serle, and of St. Mary's, the Dean and Chapter. The tithes of both parishes were commuted for land and corn-rents, in 1815, and the great tithes of All Saints' have been, under the recent act, commuted for £113. The church is an ancient structure. A national school is supported by subscription; and the interest of £50 is distributed among the poor. Westward from the place is a small Roman camp, named Knooke Castle, and near it an irregular ditch running in various directions, as if intended to form some ancient boundary line; and there are some remains of a convent. Commodore Michel, who circumnavigated the globe with Captain Cook, was born and buried here.

CHITTERN (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WARMINSTER, hundred of HEYTESBURY, Warminster and S. divisions of WILTS, 3¾ miles (E. by N.) from Heytesbury; containing 180 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1075 acres, and is in every respect similar to the parish of Chittern All Saints; they both form one village of a single street, each side of which is respectively in its own parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to that of All Saints, and valued in the king's books at £6: the appropriate tithes, belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Sarum, have been commuted for £125; the vicarial glebe consists of 164 acres. There is a place of worship for dissenters.

CHITTLEHAMPTON (St. URITH), a parish, in the union and hundred of SOUTH MOLTON, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, 5¼ miles (W.) from South Molton; containing 1893 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the river Taw, and intersected by the new Exeter road, is enlivened with some beautiful scenery on the banks of the river, especially at Head Wood; and the grounds of Hudscott, one of the seats of the Rolle family, add materially to the interest of the view. Culm is obtained within its limits, and limestone is found, imbedded in thick slate or flag-stone. A fair is held on the third Thursday in March. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £34. 18. 11½.; net income, £413; patron and impropiator, Lord Rolle. The church is in the later English style, and has a handsome embattled tower; the pulpit is richly ornamented with figures of saints and with foliage, finely carved, and the window above the altar is embellished with painted glass; there are some beautiful monuments to the Giffards and the Rolle family. A chapel of ease, dedicated to St. John, was built in 1838, by subscription, aided by a grant of £200 from the Incorporated Society, and has been endowed by Lord Rolle, who has also built a residence for the minister. There are two schools supported by subscription. At Brightley are some remains of an ancient mansion and a chapel.

CHITTOE, a tything, in the parish of BISHOP'S-CANNINGS, union of DEVIZES, hundred of POTTERNE and CANNINGS, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS, 5 miles (N. W.) from Devizes; containing 207 inhabitants.

CHIVELSTONE (St. SYLVESTER), a parish, in the union of KINGSBRIDGE, hundred of COLERIDGE, Stan-borough and Coleridge, and S. divisions of DEVON, 6 miles (S. E. by S.) from Kingsbridge; containing 591 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Stokenham. At Ford is a meeting-house for dissenters.

CHIVESFIELD, county of HERTFORD. — See GRAVELEY.

CHIVINGTON, EAST, a township, in the parish of WARKWORTH, union of MORPETH, E. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 10½ miles (N. N. E.) from Morpeth; containing 299 inhabitants. This place is situated on the eastern coast, and, with West Chivington, is the property of Earl Grey. Part of the land, adjoining Druridge bay, was formerly overflowed by the tide, owing to its lying low, and from that circumstance is called the Salt meadow. As a commutation for the tithes, rent-charges amounting to £401. 18. 4., have been awarded, of which £344 are payable to the Bishop of Carlisle, and £57. 15. to the Vicar of Warkworth.

CHIVINGTON, WEST, a township, in the parish of WARKWORTH, union of MORPETH, E. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8 miles (N. by E.) from Morpeth; containing 67 inhabitants. It was formerly, like East Chivington, of more importance than it is at present, as appears from the foundations of houses still to be seen. The township comprises 1816 acres, of a stiff soil, black top land with a clay band, mostly arable; 150 acres are meadow, and 500 wood; the surface is generally level, the air salubrious, and there are fine sea views: the North Sea is to the east. About 1000 acres here are occupied by Mr. Samuel Goodman, who has much improved the estate, and who has a commodious and handsome house. The tithes have been commuted for £166. 9. 8., of which £150. 7. 8. are payable to the Bishop of Carlisle, and £16. 2. to the vicar of the parish. There was formerly a chapel, which has long been in ruins: the burial-ground still remains.

CHOBHAM (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of CHERTSEY, First division of the hundred of GODLEY, W. division of SURREY, 4½ miles (E. S. E.) from Bagshot; containing 1989 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 13,000 acres, of which 4500 are arable, pasture, and meadow, 40 wood and plantation, and the rest waste and common, forming part of Bagshot Heath; the surface is hilly, and the soil generally sand, superincumbent on beds of gravel. The village, which is situated in a valley, is a polling-place for the western division of the county. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 2. 1.; net income, £148; patron, John Thornton, Esq.; improprators, Sir W. Abdy, Bart., and others. The glebe contains about 70 acres. The church, which is in the early style of English architecture, with modern windows, contains several neat monuments. A small chapel of ease has been erected at West-End, in the parish; and there is a place of worship for Baptists. A school is supported by subscription, to which Thomas Bainbridge, Esq., bequeathed, in 1834, £360 in the three per cent. consols. There are a Benevolent Society and a Lying-in fund; and the parish derives from £40 to £50 per annum from Henry Smith's charity. At Chobham Park are the remains of a large mansion, in which Archbishop Heath died. Near Westby Green is a chalybeate spring.

CHOCKNELL, a hamlet, in the parish of LEIGH, union of MARTLEY, Lower division of the hundred of PERSHORE, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 5¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Worcester. This was formerly a distinct parish, but the living, which was a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 1. 5½., is now consolidated with the rectory of Leigh, and the church has been demolished.

CHOLDERTON, EAST, a chapelry, in the parish of AMPORT, union and hundred of ANDOVER, Andover and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (W.) from Andover; containing 328 inhabitants.

CHOLDERTON, WEST (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union and hundred of AMESBURY, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Amesbury; containing 170 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1662 acres, of which 1410 are arable, 147 meadow and pasture, and 35 woodland: the new road from Salisbury to Marlborough passes through the village. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 0. 7½., and in the patronage of Oriel College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £267, and the glebe contains 9 acres, with a glebe-house, recently built. A new church has been erected near the site of the old one, a small, mean edifice. Anthony Cratcherode, Esq., in 1753, bequeathed £12 per annum for charitable purposes.

CHOLLERTON, (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of HEXHAM, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing, with the townships of Barrasford, Chollerton, Colwell with Swinburn, and Gunnerton with Chipchase, 1129 inhabitants, of whom 155 are in the township of Chollerton, 6 miles (N.) from Hexham. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 14. 4½.; net income, £361; patron and incumbent, Rev. C. Bird; improprators, Mercers' Company and others. The church contains an east window of stained glass, presented by Joseph Price, Esq., of Gateshead. The chapelry of Birtley, which was separated from the church about seventy years ago, is situated in the parish; and there is a small private chapel in the park of Chipchase Castle, built about eighty years since, in which the vicar performs divine service four times in the year. A national school is supported by subscription. About a mile from the village of Chollerton was the line of the walls and fosse erected by the Romans and South Britons, at various times, to protect themselves from the incursions of the Picts; and within the parish are the remains of two ancient and extensive castles, called Chipchase and Swinburn, which have partly been converted into elegant modern structures.

CHOLMONDELEY, a township, in the parish of MALPAS, union of NANTWICH, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 7½ miles (W.) from Nantwich; containing 260 inhabitants. Cholmondeley House was garrisoned in 1643, by 400 royalists, who, in the month of April, were attacked and defeated by the parliamentary troops from Nantwich, having lost 50 men and 600 horses: it afterwards fell into the hands of the parliamentarians, and was recaptured by the royalists, who were driven from it again on the 30th of June, 1644. The present splendid seat of the Marquess of Cholmondeley, about half a mile from the former, was begun in 1801, and completed in 1804; a domestic chapel, to which the tenants may resort, is attached to it. The tithes of the township, together with those of Bickeley, Bulkeley, and Larkton, have been commuted for £374. 8., of which £342 are payable to the impropiators, and £32. 8. to the rector of Malpas.

CHOLMONDSTONE, a township, in the parish of ACTON, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Nantwich; containing 206 inhabitants.

CHOLSALL, a hamlet, in the parish of ST. HELEN'S, union of ABINGDON, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS; containing 16 inhabitants.

CHOLSEY (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and parliamentary borough of WALLINGFORD, hundred of READING, though locally in the hundred of Moreton, county of BERKS, 3 miles (S. W.) from Wallingford; containing 1191 inhabitants. This place was distinguished for its monastery, founded in 986, by Ethelred, as an atonement for the murder of his brother, Edward the Martyr, and which, together with the village, was destroyed by the Danes in 1006. The manor belonged to the abbots of Reading, who had a splendid seat here, which in 1555 was granted to Sir Francis Englefield, and afterwards conveyed by the crown to William Knollys, Viscount Wallingford, subsequently created Earl of Banbury: the great barn, which measured 301 feet in length, 54 feet in breadth, and 51 in height, was taken down some years since, and four smaller ones were erected in its place. The parish comprises 4118a. 3r. Sp., and is intersected by the line of the Great Western railway. The living is a vicarage, with that of Moulsoford united, valued in the king's books at £18. 9. 9½., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £375; impropiators, the family of Minshull. The church contains some portions of Norman architecture. A national school has been built.

CHOLSTREY, a township, in the parish and union of LEOMINSTER, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD; containing 160 inhabitants.

CHOPPINGTON, a township, in the parish of BEDLINGTON, union of MORPETH, E. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, though locally on the east side, and for election purposes connected with the N. division of Northumberland, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Morpeth; containing 167 inhabitants. The township consists of East and West Choppington, both situated on the way side between Morpeth and the Stakeford, and also of the hamlet of Sheepwash, where is a bridge of four arches over the Wansbeck, from which the prospect is very beautiful: the whole estate comprises about 625 acres, tithe-free. The chapel of Morpeth held some land here in 1305; and among the families that possessed property after that date, occur those of Hecham, Bertram, Lawson, and Ogle. Some land now belongs to Bothal rectory, which, perhaps, was originally part of the glebe of Sheepwash rectory; but the river having, since that period, changed its course a little, has left this portion in Bedlington parish, which formerly belonged to Sheepwash.

CHOPWELL, a township, in the parish of RYTON, union of GATESHEAD, W. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Gateshead; containing 320 inhabitants. It was given by Bishop Hugh to the abbey of Newminster, and at the Dissolution was held under that establishment by the Swinburns, who are supposed to have received from the crown a grant of the fee simple; it afterwards belonged to the families of Constable, Clavering, and Cowper, and now is the property of various owners. The township contains some coal; and at Black-hall, on the river Derwent, is a manufactory for German steel, which is stated to have been first carried on here by some emigrants from Germany. Lady Liddell supports a school.

CHORLEY, a township, in the parish of WILMSLOW, union and hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Macclesfield; containing 561 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £169. 10.

CHORLEY, a township, in the parish of WRENBURY, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Nantwich; containing 183 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £81, and the vicarial for £28. 17. 11., payable to the vicar of Acton. A small school is supported by the Marquess of Cholmondeley.

CHORLEY (St. Lawrence), a market-town, and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of LEYLAND, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 32 miles (S. by E.) from Lancaster, and 208 (N. W. by N.) from London, on the road to Scotland; containing 13,139 inhabitants. The name of this place is derived from its situation on the river Chor, about a mile from its confluence with the Yarrow, and from the Saxon word Ley, a field, or from the family of Ley, who were its ancient proprietors. The town is pleasantly situated on the summit of a considerable elevation, and, though in Leland's time described as "a wonderful poore or rather no market," has, from the excellent quarries in the neighbourhood, and from the enterprising spirit of its inhabitants, rapidly risen into importance, and increased in population and extent. It is well lighted with gas, by a company established in 1819, and amply supplied with water, under the direction of a company formed in 1823. The environs, in which are many elegant mansions, abound with diversified scenery, and the hills are rich in coal, slate, ashlar, and millstone. Mines of lead-ore and alum-shale exist in the neighbourhood: the lead-mine is worked at Anglezark, and contains an abundance of carbonate of barytes. The principal branch of manufacture is that of cotton, which is carried on to a considerable extent; the chief articles are muslins and calicoes. There are also large printing and bleaching establishments on the banks of the streams in the vicinity; many of the factories are worked by water, and several by steam-engines. The Lancaster and the Leeds and Liverpool canals, which unite to the south-west of Whittle-le-Woods, pass within half a mile of the town; and facilities of communication are likewise afforded by the Bolton and Preston railway, between this place and the Euxton Junction, comprising some very heavy works, and which was opened 22nd June, 1843. The market is on Tuesday; and there are fairs on March 26th, May 5th, and Aug. 20th, principally for cattle; and on Sept. 4th, 5th, and 6th, for woollen-cloth, hardware, and pedlery. The county magistrates hold a petty-session for the division, once in five weeks; and the lord of the manor holds a court leet once a year. An act for the recovery of small debts within the town, was passed in 1841. The town-hall, a neat stone building, under which the market is held, was erected in 1802, at the expense of the late John Hollingshead, Esq.: adjoining it is a small prison for the confinement of offenders prior to their committal to the county gaol.

Chorley was originally a chapelry in the parish of Croston, from which it was separated in 1793, when that extensive district was divided into three distinct parishes. The LIVING is a rectory not in charge; net income, £1022; patron and incumbent, Rev. John Whalley Master, B.D. The church is an ancient building, retaining several features of Norman character, of which the south entrance is a fine specimen; it formerly contained a relic, said to be the head of its tutelar saint, which was brought from Normandy by Sir Rowland Stanley, Knt., and presented to the parish by his brother. St. George's church, completed in 1825, at an expense of £11,845, defrayed by the Parliamentary Commissioners, is a handsome and spacious structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and contains 2012 sittings, of which 1590 are free: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rector. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. The grammar school was originally established by the churchwardens, who, in 1634, built a schoolroom; it has an endowment of £11 per annum, arising from subsequent benefactions, and a new schoolroom was erected in 1824. A national school, commenced in 1832; a school for Roman Catholics, and another for dissenters, are supported by subscription; and an almshouse was erected and endowed, in 1682, by Hugh Cooper, Esq., for six aged persons. The poor law union of Chorley comprises 26 parishes and townships, and contains a population of 38,836.

CHORLTON, a township, in the parish of MALPAS, union of WREXHAM, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Malpas; containing 150 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £60. Roman coins of the reigns of Valerian and Posthumus were dug up in March, 1818, in a field here.

CHORLTON, a township, in the parish of WYBUNBURY, union and hundred of NANTWICH; S. division of the county of CHESTER, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Nantwich; containing 141 inhabitants.

CHORLTON, a township, in the parish of BACKFORD, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Chester; containing 85 inhabitants.

CHORLTON, a chapelry, in the parish of MANCHESTER, union of CHORLTON, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Manchester; containing, with Hardy, 632 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £103; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of the Collegiate Church of Manchester. In 1741, Margaret Usherwood bequeathed £160 for teaching children.

CHORLTON, a chapelry, in the parish of ECCLESHALL, union of NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 6 miles (S. S. W.) from Newcastle; containing 243 inhabitants. It comprises 1921*a.* 1*r.* 36*p.*, and is crossed by the Grand Junction railway. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £71; patron, Bishop of Lichfield. A rent-charge of £244. 1*s.* 4*d.* has been awarded to the prebendary of High Offlow as a commutation for the tithes of this chapelry and the township of Chorlton-Hill. The chapel is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

CHORLTON-HILL, a township, in the parish of ECCLESHALL, union of NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD; containing 122 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for dissenters.

CHORLTON-RROW, a chapelry, and the head of a union, in the parish of MANCHESTER, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER; containing 28,336 inhabitants. This place is adjacent to Manchester, and consists of several good streets, well lighted with gas, paved, and amply supplied with water; and is inhabited by many of the merchants and manufacturers of that town, in the trade of which it greatly participates, there being several large spinning-mills in the chapelry. It is within the jurisdiction of the Manchester court of requests for the recovery of debts under £5. In 1837 an act was passed for establishing a company for laying out an ornamental park in the neighbourhood. The chapel, dedicated to All Saints, was built by the late Rev. Edward Smith, and opened in 1804; it is a small neat structure of brick, with a turret. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £107; patron and impropriator, Rev. C. Burton. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; and an infants' school was established in 1825. The poor law union comprises 13 townships, and contains a population of 93,736.— See MANCHESTER.

CHOULESBURY (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of AYLESBURY, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Chesham; containing 124 inhabitants. It comprises 176*a.* 1*r.* 31*p.*, of which about 92 acres are arable, and 46 uninclosed common. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and in the patronage of Trustees: the tithes have been commuted for £30. 5*s.* 6*d.*, and the glebe comprises eight acres, to which a glebe-house is attached. Here is one of the finest Danish encampments in the kingdom: it incloses the church and a portion of the glebe land, and is exactly one mile in circumference; the trench in some places is 30 feet deep, but in others much filled up with rubbish; the mounds are known by the name of "Bury Banks." It formed one of the chain of Danish encampments running along the Chiltern hills from north to south.

CHOWBENT, a village, in the chapelry of ATHERTON, parish and union of LEIGH, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Leigh. The village is large, and the manufacture of nails is carried on to some extent: several carding-engines, spinning-frames, &c., were once made. Fairs for toys and pedlery are held on June 29th and Aug. 24th; but a market, formerly held by custom, has fallen into disuse. A chapel, which belonged to a congregation of dissenters, was consecrated by Dr. Wilson, the pious and benevolent bishop of Sodor and Man: the living is a donative, in the gift of Lord Lilford. There is a place of worship for Unitarians.

CHOWLEY, a township, in the parish of CODDINGTON, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $9\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Chester; containing 77 inhabitants.

CHRISHALL (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of SAFFRON-WALDEN, hundred of UTTLESFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 7 miles (E.) from Royston; containing 521 inhabitants. It comprises 2767*a.* 10*p.*, of which the surface is diversified, and the higher lands are pleasantly situated. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13; net income, £200; patron, Bishop of London; appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1807. The church is a handsome structure, with a square embattled tower surmounted by a spire.

CHRIST-CHURCH, county of MIDDLESEX.—See SPITALFIELDS.

CHRISTCHURCH (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT, division of CHRISTCHURCH, hundred of CALDICOT, county of MONMOUTH, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Newport; containing, with the hamlet of Caerton ultra Pontem, 1310 inhabitants. This parish, in the year 1291, belonged to the neighbouring priory of Goldcliff, which was annexed to the abbey of Tewkesbury in 1442, and in 1451, with its possessions, granted to Eton College. The parish is partly bounded by the river Usk, which separates it from Caerleon, the Iscā Silurum of the Romans, and comprises about 5000 acres; the surface is marked throughout by hills and undulations beautifully wooded, and the soil consists of several varieties of sand and clay; limestone is extensively quarried for manure and other purposes. The petty-sessions for the division are held here. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 4. 2., and in the patronage of Eton College: the improper tithes have been commuted for £150, and the vicarial for £265; the glebe contains 90 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a large and elegant edifice, occupying an elevated situation. There is a school, supported partly by subscription and partly by small weekly payments from the children. At a farm called Bullmore, was a Roman burial-ground; and many urns containing ashes, and coins have been found.

Seal and Arms.

CHRISTCHURCH (HOLY TRINITY), a borough, sea-port, market-town, and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, Ringwood and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $21\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Southampton, and 100 (S. W. by W.) from London; containing 5994 inhabitants, and comprising the tythings of Burc, Burton, Street, Winkton, Hurn, Iford, Parley, and Tuckton, and the chapelry of Hinton-Admiral. This place is of great antiquity, and, from some relics discovered in the church, is supposed to have been of Roman origin; by the Saxons it was called Twyneham-Bourne and Tweon-æa, from its situation between two ivers. The earliest historical notice of it occurs in the Saxon Chronicles, which record its occupation by Ethelwold, during his revolt against his kinsman, Edward the Elder. In Domesday book it is mentioned, under the appellation of Thuinam, as a burgh and royal manor, containing 31 messuages. Its present name is derived from its church and priory, founded before the Conquest for a dean and twenty-four Secular canons, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity, which was rebuilt in the reign of William Rufus, and dedicated to our Saviour Christ, by Ralph Flambard, Bishop of Durham, and formerly dean of the priory: it was largely endowed by Richard de Redvers, Earl of Devon, to whom Henry I. gave the manor. Earl Baldwin, son and successor to Earl Richard, placed canons regular of the order of St. Augustine in the priory, which flourished till the Dissolution, when its revenue was £544. 6.: it was granted by Henry VIII. to the inhabitants for their parochial church. Some portions of the walls that inclosed the conventual buildings still remain; the ancient lodge is occupied as a dwelling-house, and the site of the refectory may be traced by the remnants of its wall. The town was fortified by Richard de Redvers, who either erected or rebuilt the castle, of which there are some remains to the north of the priory: these consist chiefly of the ruins of the keep, on the summit of an artificial mount (the walls of which are more than ten feet in thickness), and part of the range that comprised the state apartments; the Norman style prevails, and the arches of some remaining windows are divided by pillars of that character.

Christchurch is situated on the borders of the New Forest, and between the rivers Avon and Stour, which, uniting their streams at a short distance below, expand into a broad sheet of water and fall into Christchurch bay, in connexion with which they form a harbour. The current of the Avon, to the east of the town, is intercepted and divided into two parts by an island, from each side of which a bridge to the opposite bank of the river forms the continuation of the road to Lymington. The harbour is accessible only at high tides to small vessels drawing not more than from five to six feet of water, the entrance being obstructed by a bar, or ledge of sand, extending from Henigsbury Head, on the Hampshire side, (where Hengist, King of the Saxons, landed,) to St. Catherine's Cliffe, in the Isle of Wight. Vessels of thirty or forty tons' burthen come up to the quay, which is about two miles from the mouth of the harbour. In this harbour, as in the neighbouring port of Poole, there is high water twice at every tide, a peculiarity arising from the situation of the coast with respect to the Isle of Wight, and from the projection of the point of land on which Hurst Castle is situated. The river Avon was made navigable to Salisbury in 1680, but the accumulation of sand has rendered the navigation useless. Many of the labouring class have for years past been employed in drawing their nets for salmon at the mouth of the haven, which is now rapidly declining: the rivers are royalties, the property of the Rt. Hon. Sir G. H. Rose. The town is partly lighted and watched, and amply supplied with water; it is much frequented during the summer months as a place of pleasant resort, and the lofty cliffs in the vicinity afford delightful views. Several of the female inhabitants were formerly employed in the knitting of stockings, but this branch of industry has declined. There are two breweries, also two manufactories for watch fusee chains, at each of which about 50 persons are employed, chiefly women and girls; and almost every cottager is engaged in preparing the work connected with this branch of manufacture. The market is on Monday; fairs are held on Trinity-Thursday and October 17th for cattle and horses, and pleasure. The GOVERNMENT is vested in a mayor, recorder, and an indefinite number of free burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk and others; but the officers do not exercise magisterial authority, the town being wholly within the jurisdiction of the county justices. The borough was summoned in the 35th of Edward I. and the 2nd of Edward II., but made no subsequent return till the 13th of Elizabeth, from which time it regularly sent two members to parliament, until the 2nd of William IV., when, by the Reform Act, it was destined thenceforward to send only one. The right of election was exercised by the mayor and free burgesses; but, by the act above named, the non-resident electors, except within seven miles, were disfranchised, and the privilege was extended to the £10 householders of an enlarged district of 5332 acres, including the parish of Holdenhurst, which was, for elective purposes, incorporated with the former borough of Christchurch, which comprised only 123 acres: the mayor is returning officer. A court leet for the manor is held twice a year by the steward.

The parish comprises by computation 30,000 acres, of which the surface is in general flat, and the soil in the vicinity of the rivers particularly fertile. The LIVING is a vicarage, with that of Holdenhurst annexed, valued in the king's books at £16; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Winchester; impropiator, Earl of Malmesbury, whose mansion of Heron Court is within the parish. The tithes of the two parishes have been commuted for £3200. 15. 6. The church is a magnificent cruciform structure, partly Norman, and partly in the early and later English styles, with a finely-proportioned and embattled tower at the west end, which was erected by the Montacutes, Earls of Salisbury, in the fifteenth century. The piers and arches of the nave, which is of Norman character, are bold and simple; the clerestory is of later date; the northern entrance is a fine specimen of the early, and the chancel of the later, English style. The altar is decorated with a rude, but interesting, representation of the genealogy of Christ, carved in the style of the age in which the church was founded: to the north of it is a beautiful sepulchral chapel, built in the reign of Henry VII., by the celebrated Countess of Salisbury, who, in the 70th year of her age, was beheaded by Henry VIII., and at the east is a spacious chapel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, erected in the fourteenth century by the ancestor of Lord Delaware; there are some other chapels of fine execution, chiefly in the later English style. The west front, principally in the early style, in which a large and handsome window has been recently inserted, is ornamented with a figure of Christ in a canopied niche. The length of the church is 311 feet, and its breadth at the western extremity 60 feet, and along the transepts 104 feet; the height of the vaulted roof is 57 feet. It was repaired in 1841, the Incorporated Society having granted £250 towards the expense. There are, an endowed chapel at Hinton, built about half a century ago; a chapel at Bransgore, a neat modern edifice; a chapel erected, in 1834, at High Cliffe; a church at Burton, erected in 1836; and a chapel, in the later English style, at Hightown, built at the expense of Lord Stuart de Rothesay and others. The Independents and Wesleyans have places of worship, and at Burton is a Roman Catholic chapel. The free grammar school is of uncertain foundation: until the year 1828, it had an endowment of £15 per annum, in South Sea stock; but the corporation being empowered to dispose of the property, some excellent schoolrooms have been built with the proceeds, at an expense of upwards of £600, on a convenient plot of ground presented by Sir G. H. Rose: the children are taught on the national system. Lancasterian schools are supported by subscription; a school is maintained by Sir G. Pocock, Bart., and T. P. Anderson, Esq.; and in another, some females are instructed at the expense of the Earl of Malmesbury. There are several charitable bequests for distribution among the poor. The union of Christchurch comprises 3 parishes, and contains a population of 7828. An intrenchment, 630 yards in length, extends across the isthmus that connects Hengistbury Head with the main land; and near its northern extremity is a large barrow, in which human bones and an urn have been found. On Catherine Hill, about a mile and a half to the north of the town, and a mile to the west of the Avon, are traces of an exploratory camp, 55 yards square, round which are six small tumuli; and near the base of the hill are ten large barrows, whereof one has been discovered to contain human bones. To the north of the camp is an elliptical earthwork, of which the greater diameter is 35, and the less 25 yards; and the remains of other intrenchments may be traced in the vicinity. Somerford Grange, about two miles to the east of the town, belonged to the priory: part of the ancient buildings, until about 20 years since, remained, including the chapel, a stone edifice, with a handsome arched roof of carved oak. On the site of the priory a large mansion was built, some time since, by Gustavus Brander, Esq., which is now occupied as a boarding-school. Hordwell Cliff, between Christchurch and Milford, is famous for the fossil remains of tropical shells, sharks' teeth, &c. &c. Tutter's Well, at Stanpit, is celebrated for the purity of its water, and for its efficacy in weakness of sight.

CHRIST-CHURCH, a parish, in the union of St. SAVIOUR'S, partly in the E. division of the hundred of BRIXTON, but chiefly within the borough of SOUTHWARK, E. division of SURREY; containing 14,606 inhabitants. This parish was anciently termed the liberty of Paris Garden, and formed a part of the parish of St. Saviour until 1706, when it was made distinct by act of parliament. It is situated on the south side of Blackfriars bridge, and consists of several ranges of good houses on both sides of Great Surrey-street, including Nelson-square on the east, and a portion of Stamford-street on the west. There are manufactories for hats, for glass, and for various articles of statuary in Roman cement, besides extensive saw-mills, a large cooperage, and works for refining antimony, and making albata. At the end of Blackfriars bridge is a building, originally called the Leverian Museum, and subsequently the Rotunda, which has been used for various purposes. The parish of Christ-Church constituted a portion of the borough of Southwark, under a charter of Edward VI., though the inhabitants did not for many years vote for its parliamentary members, in consequence of having allowed the privilege to fall into disuse; they have, however, been re-invested with the power of exercising the elective franchise, by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45. It is within the jurisdiction of the South-wark court of requests, established by an act passed in the 22nd of George II., for the recovery of debts under 40s. The living is a rectory not in charge, in the patronage of the Trustees of Mr. Marshall's charity: the church is a neat edifice of brick, with a square tower surmounted by a cupola. Surrey chapel, built by the late Rev. Rowland Hill, is within the parish; and there are also places of worship for Baptists and Unitarians, the latter of which, in Stamford-street, has a fine portico of six fluted Doric columns supporting a triangular pediment. The parochial schools, on the national system, in Green Walk, were rebuilt in 1836, at an expense of nearly £2000. The British and Foreign school, situated in an alley opposite the workhouse, contains a spacious schoolroom for boys, and one of smaller dimensions for girls. The workhouse, since the incorporation of the parish with the union of St. Saviour's, has been enlarged at an expense of nearly £8000. Almshouses in Green Walk were founded and endowed by Mr. Charles Hopton, for 28 poor men, each of whom has a separate house of two rooms; and in Church-street are almshouses for 45 women, endowed by Mr. Edward Edwards, in 1753, the buildings consisting of four separate ranges of neat houses, erected successively in 1753, 1777, 1786, and 1791. There are various charities for general purposes, all of minor account except Marshall's charity, founded by John Marshall in 1627, and producing nearly £900 per annum; Hammerton's, producing £230 per annum; and Boyse's, producing £160 per annum.

CHRISTIAN-MALFORD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CHIPPENHAM, partly in the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, but chiefly in the N. division of the hundred of DAMERHAM, of which it forms a detached portion, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, 5 miles (N. E. by N.) from Chippenham; containing, with the tithing of Avon, 1198 inhabitants. This place is situated on the river Avon, commencing at a bridge over an ancient ford across that stream, from the badness of which it is supposed to have derived its name; and its prefix most probably originated from the fact of Christianity having been promulgated here at a very early period. The parish comprises by computation 2762 acres, of which between 300 and 400 are arable, 140 wood, and the rest pasture. The village, in the centre of which is an ancient cross, is situated on the river, which here turns two cloth-mills; and the parish is intersected by the road from Oxford to Bath, and the Great Western railway. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £27, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells: the tithes have been commuted for £700, and the glebe comprises about 100 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. Attached to the benefice is a copyhold of 60 acres held on lives, and a manor, of which the rector is lord. The church has been recently repaired and repewed. There is a place of worship for Independents, said to be the oldest in the county; and a national school is supported principally by the Earl of Carnarvon, and the rector, to the former of whom the greater part of the parish belongs. The interest of £100, bequeathed by the Rev. W. Willes, a former incumbent, is appropriated towards the support of a lending library for the poor.

CHRISTLETON (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Christleton, Abbots-Cotton, Edmunds-Cotton, Littleton, and Rowton; and containing 875 inhabitants, of whom 625 are in the township of Christleton, 2 miles (E. by S.) from Chester. This place, at the time of the Norman survey, is said to have been very populous; it continued of some importance, and was fortified for the parliament, and made the headquarters of Sir William Brereton. At Rowton Moor a battle was fought between the royalist and parliamentary forces, in which the former were defeated; and, on the siege of Chester being raised, in February, 1645, Christleton was, in a sally of the citizens, very nearly destroyed by fire. The parish is situated on the road from London to Shrewsbury, and comprises by admeasurement 3000 acres; the Chester and Ellesmere canal passes close to the village, and, at little more than a quarter of a mile from the bridge, is crossed by a viaduct of the Chester and Crewe railway. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £39. 5.; net income, £827; patron, Hon. E. M. L. Mostyn: the glebe consists of about 40 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church existed prior to the Conquest, and was wholly rebuilt of brick in 1738, but the stone tower bears the date 1530. There is a place of worship for Independents. In 1779, John Seller, of Littleton, left about £10 per annum for teaching children; and a school-house was built in 1800, by subscription.

CHRISTON, a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of WINTERSTOKE, E. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Cross; containing 92 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 572 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 1. 8., and in the gift of Sir John Smyth, Bart., and the Rev. Charles Gore: the tithes have been commuted for £95, and the glebe consists of 14 acres. The church is principally in the early English style. A school is supported by subscription.

CHRISTOW (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of ST. THOMAS, hundred of WONFORD, Wonford and S. divisions of DEVON, 7½ miles (S. W.) from Exeter; containing 624 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Teign, and comprises by measurement 3200 acres: there are many excellent cherry orchards; mines of manganese are worked, and a lead-mine has been lately discovered, which affords some beautiful specimens of mundic, &c. &c. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 6. 8.; patron and impropiator, Viscount Exmouth. The great tithes have been commuted for £99. 10., and the vicarial for £169. 19.: an excellent glebe-house has been erected, at the expense of the present incumbent; and attached to the vicarage, is a glebe of 22 acres, in the parish of Bovey Tracey. The church, the arches of which are in the pointed style, has a Norman font, and some fine screen-work across the nave and aisles: it is said to have been erected by Lord John Russell, in the reign of Henry VIII., of which monarch he purchased the parish for £200; the tower, which is 80 feet high, and much admired, is supposed to be of later erection. There is a place of worship for Baptists. The poor receive bread every Sunday from the rents of an estate called Smith-hayes, producing about £40 per annum, left by a clergyman named Stocke, in the latter part of the 17th century; the residue, after affording small payments to two adjoining parishes, belongs to the vicar. Lord Exmouth takes the title of Baron Exmouth, of Canon-teign, from his seat in the parish. Pope House is said to have been a cell to the priory of Cowick, near Exeter. The ancient mansion of Canonteign was besieged by Cromwell's army, and the loop-holes are still to be seen, through which the muskets were fired by the besieged.

CHUDLEIGH (ST. MARTIN), a market-town and parish, in the union of NEWTON-ABBOT, hundred of EXMINSTER, Teignbridge and S. divisions of DEVON, 9 miles (S. S. W.) from Exeter, and 182 (W. S. W.) from London; containing 2415 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Chidleighe, was the residence of the bishops of Exeter, who had a sumptuous palace, of which there are some small remains. In the year 1309, Bishop Stapleton procured for it the grant of a weekly market and an annual fair. During the parliamentary war, the army under General Fairfax was quartered in the town. In 1807, nearly half of it was destroyed by fire, the loss of property having been estimated at £60,000 value. It is pleasantly situated on an eminence near the eastern bank of the river Teign, and consists principally of one long street; the houses are in general modern and neatly built; the inhabitants are indifferently supplied with water. The environs are pleasant, and abound with woodland scenery; antimony and cobalt are found among the mineral productions, and there are quarries of argillaceous slate, in which many organic remains have been discovered. The trade, which consisted principally in the manufacture of woollen-cloth, has lately declined: extensive quarries of good marble and limestone, which abound in the vicinity, afford employment to many of the inhabitants; and the neighbourhood is famed for cider of superior quality. The market is on Saturday: the fairs, chiefly for cattle and sheep, are on Easter-Tuesday, the third Tuesday and Wednesday in June, and October 2nd, unless it falls on Saturday, Sunday, or Monday, in which case it is postponed till the Tuesday following. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £21, and in the patronage of trustees for the inhabitants: the improper tithes, belonging to Lord Clifford, have been commuted for £250, and the vicarial for £550; the glebe comprises one acre, to which there is a glebe-house. There is a place of worship for Independents; also a Roman Catholic chapel at Ugbrooke, in the parish. The free grammar school was founded, in 1668, by Mr. John Pynsent, of Combe, in the county of Surrey, who endowed it with a rent-charge of £30 per annum, founding also three exhibitions for its benefit at Cambridge, of £5 each, tenable for four years. There is likewise an endowment of £5 per annum for teaching boys; and a national school is supported by subscription. Half a mile from the town is Chudleigh Rock, a stupendous mass of limestone, in which is a cavern of considerable extent; and near it are very perfect remains of an elliptical encampment, supposed from its form to be of Danish origin, but, from its proximity to a Roman road, to have been previously occupied by that people. Chudleigh confers the title of Baron on the family of Clifford.

CHULMLEIGH (ST. MARY MAGDALENE), a market-town and parish, in the union of SOUTH MOLTON, hundred of WITHERIDGE, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, 21½ miles (N. W.) from Exeter, and 194 (W. by S.) from London; containing 1647 inhabitants. This place was anciently called Chimleighe; and in the reign of Henry III., John de Courtenay, Earl of Devonshire, obtained for it the grant of a weekly market. During the parliamentary war, a skirmish took place here in 1645. The town, a considerable portion of which was destroyed by fire in 1803, is situated on an eminence rising gently from the eastern bank of the river Taw; the houses, with the exception of a few that are modern and well built, are low and covered with thatch. The market is on Friday; and fairs are held on the third Friday in March, the Wednesday in Easter-week, and the last Wednesday in July. A portreeve, whose office is merely nominal, and other officers, are appointed annually at the court leet and baron of the lord of the manor. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 18. 1½.; net income, £415; patron and incumbent, Rev. George Hole. In the church are five prebends, endowed with glebe and a portion of the tithes, viz., Brookland, valued at £4. 8. 4.; Denes, at £4. 6. 8.; Higher Heyne, at £5. 13. 4.; Lower Heyne, at £5; and Penels, at £5. The church, which was damaged by lightning in 1797, is an ancient and spacious structure, in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower; the interior is fine, and contains a screen of oak, richly carved. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. A school was endowed by Lady Pyncombe with £10 per annum, and another has the interest of £100.

CHUNALL, a township, in the parish and union of GLOSSOP, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 7½ miles (N. by W.) from Chapel-en-le-Frith; containing 111 inhabitants.

CHURCH, a tything, in the parish of DOWNTON, union of ALDERBURY, hundred of DOWNTON, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS; containing 319 inhabitants.

CHURCHAM (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of WESTBURY, partly in the Lower division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S-BARTON, E. division, but chiefly in the hundred of WESTBURY, W. division, of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4½ miles (W. by N.) from Gloucester; containing, with the hamlets of Highnam, Linton, and Over, 870 inhabitants. It is pleasantly situated on the river Severn, across which, in the hamlet of Over, about one mile from Gloucester, is a handsome stone bridge of one arch, 150 feet in the span, completed under the superintendance of Thomas Telford, Esq., at an expense of nearly £50,000, defrayed by the county. The living is a vicarage, with that of Bulley annexed, valued in the king's books at £20. 5.; net income, £386; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. The tithes were commuted for land in 1802. The church is small, and has some remains of Norman architecture.

CHURCH-BRAMPTON.—See BRAMPTON, CHURCH.—And other places having a similar distinguishing prefix will be found under the proper name.

CHURCHDOWN (St. Bartholomew), a parish, in the Upper division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S-BARTON, union and E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (E. by N.) from Gloucester; containing, with Hucklecote hamlet, 999 inhabitants. This parish, commonly called Choren, comprises 2575*a.* 3*r.* 17*p.*, and is situated in an extensive vale, from which an elliptical eminence, about four miles in circuit at the base, rises to the height of 2500 feet: stone is quarried for the roads. The Birmingham and Gloucester railway, and the road from Gloucester to London, pass through the parish. The village lies in a vale around the base of the hill. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £88; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Bristol, whose tithes have been commuted for £1214. The church, a very ancient plain edifice, is on the summit of the hill above noticed, commanding most extensive views; the mounds by which it is surrounded, in connexion with the abrupt ascent of the hill, have led to the opinion that it was originally the site of a Roman or British fortification. There are two schools, supported partly by an endowment of £25 a year, bequeathed in 1734, by the Rev. H. Wyndowe, who was minister of the parish; also four almshouses for poor widows, endowed with £4 per annum each. John Harmer, professor of Greek in the University of Oxford, author of a life of Cicero, a Greek Etymological Dictionary, and other learned works, was a native of the place; he died in 1670.

CHURCH-END, a township, in the parish of SHENLEY, union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM; containing 227 inhabitants.

CHURCH-END, a hamlet, in the parish of TIDENHAM, union of CHEPSTOW, hundred of WESTBURY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 253 inhabitants.

CHURCHENFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of CHURCH-STANTON, union of TAUNTON, hundred of HEMYOCK, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 9¼ miles (N. N. E.) from Honiton. The village is noted for its excellent cider. There are cattle fairs on January 25th and March 6th.

CHURCHFIELD, a hamlet, and formerly a chapelry, in the parish and union of OUNDLE, hundred of POLEBROOK, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 2½ miles (W.) from Oundle. The chapel has been demolished.

CHURCHILL (All Saints), a parish, in the union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Chipping-Norton; containing 651 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 16. 0½; net income, £177; patron and improprator, J. H. Langston, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1787. The church, having become dilapidated and dangerous, was rebuilt on a more elevated site, commanding some extensive views: the chancel of the old church still remains. There are two schools, one of which is endowed for 24 children, and is otherwise supported by Mr. Langston, who solely maintains the other.

CHURCHILL (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of WINTERSTOKE, E. division of SOMERSET, 4¾ miles (N. by E.) from Axbridge; containing 970 inhabitants. This is a very ancient place, occurring in old deeds under the names of Curic-hill, Cheuchill, and Cherchill. Immediately after the Conquest it was held by Roger de Leon, who came over with the Conqueror, and who appears to have assumed the name of Courcell, or Curcelle, from this property: he is said to have been the remote ancestor of John Churchill, the great Duke of Marlborough. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £98; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The church is a handsome structure, with an embattled tower, and contains a fine altar-piece representing the Lord's Supper, and several interesting monuments. Two small schools are supported, partly by an endowment of £4 per annum. On a very high point of the Mendip Hills, above the village, is an encampment, called Dolberry Castle, which forms a parallelogram of 540 yards by 220, inclosed by a ditch on all sides but the south-east; where the steepness of the hill rendered it unnecessary; within it many Roman and Saxon coins and fragments of weapons have been found.

CHURCHILL (St. James), a parish, in the union of KIDDERMINSTER, Lower division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, Stourbridge and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 3½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Kidderminster; containing 164 inhabitants. It is partly bounded by Staffordshire, and is crossed, from north to south, by the road from Stourbridge to Kidderminster; it contains 844 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Rev. J. Turner: a portion of the tithes were commuted, in 1773, for land, of which there are 95 acres, valued at about £100 per annum; the remainder were recently commuted for a rent-charge of £166, and there is a glebe-house. Richard Penne and Roger Bennet, in 1602, bequeathed property producing about £30 per annum, chiefly for teaching children.

CHURCHILL (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of PERSHORE, Lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 5½ miles (E. by S.) from Worcester; containing 115 inhabitants. The parish is intersected from west to east by the road from Worcester to Alcester, and bounded on the west by a stream which falls into the Avon; it consists of 660 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8.; net income, £167; patron, Robert Berkeley, Esq.

CHURCH-KIRK, a township, in the parish of WHALLEY, union, and Lower division of the hundred, of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 4¾ miles (E.) from Blackburn; containing 1545 inhabitants. This township, and the townships of Huncoat, and Yate with Pick-up-Bank, form the parochial chapelry of Church-Kirk, comprising 3080 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £218; patrons, Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford; improprators, Trustees of Hume's Exhibitions. The chapel is dedicated to St. James. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school was endowed by T. B. Cole, Esq., with £721 invested in the funds.

CHURCHOVER (Holy Trinity), a parish, in the union of RUGBY, Rugby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 4¼ miles (N. by E.) from Rugby; containing 339 inhabitants. It is watered by the river Swift, and comprises by computation 1500 acres; the surface is varied, rising in some parts into hills of considerable elevation, and in others being flat; the soil is clayey, with some gravel. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15; net income, £270; patron, Henry Grimes, Esq. The church is a small edifice, with a spire. Two schools are supported by subscription. The Roman Watling-street passes through the parish, on the line of which, and on the brow of Knightlow Hill, is a very high tumulus.

CHURCH-STANTON (St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of TAUNTON, hundred of HEMYOCK, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 11 miles (N. by E.) from Honiton; containing 1085 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 5. 5.; net income, £421; patron, Rev. R. P. Clarke. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1779. The church has been enlarged by the addition of 237 sittings. There is a small endowed school.

CHURCHSTOW (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of KINGSBRIDGE, hundred of STANBOROUGH, Stanborough and Coleridge, and S. divisions of DEVON, 2 miles (N. W. by W.) from Kingsbridge; containing 542 inhabitants, including 211 in the union workhouse, situated in the parish. It is bounded on the north-west by the river Avon, and comprises about 1600 acres; the surface is irregular, rising in some parts into hills of considerable height; and the soil is extremely various, in some places exuberantly rich, and in others sterile and unproductive. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Kingsbridge annexed, valued in the king's books at £16. 16. 11., and in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £118: the impropriation belongs to the Corporation of Exeter, as trustees for a charity. The tithes have been commuted for £325, and the glebe consists of 14 acres.

CHURCH-TOWN, a hamlet, in the parish of BACKWELL, union of BEDMINSTER, hundred of HARTCLIFFE with BEDMINSTER, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 82 inhabitants.

CHURSTON-FERRERS, a parish, in the union of TOTNES, hundred of HAYTOR, Paignton and S. divisions of DEVON, 1½ mile (N. W.) from Brixham; containing, with the hamlet of Galpton, 772 inhabitants. It is situated on the coast of the English Channel, and is bounded on the north by Torbay, and on the west by the river Dart, which is here navigable. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Brixham, and in the patronage of the Crown: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £212, and the vicarial for £180. The church contains an ancient wooden screen. There is a school, in which a few girls are educated at the expense of Lady Buller; also an almshouse for seven people.

CHURT, county of SURREY.—See CHART.

CHURTON, a township, in the parish of ALDFORD, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 4½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Chester; containing 254 inhabitants.

CHURTON, a township, in the parish of FARNDON, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 7 miles (S. by E.) from Chester; containing 132 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £71, of which £70 are payable to an impropiator, and £1 to the curate of the parish.

CHURTON, or CHIRKTON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of DEVIZES, hundred of SWANBOROUGH, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS, 4¼ miles (N. E. by E.) from East Lavington; containing, with Conock tything, 428 inhabitants, of whom 268 are in the township of Churton. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 0. 5., and has a net income of £168; it is in the patronage of the Crown, and the impropriation belongs to the trustees of Heytesbury almshouse.

CHURTON-HEATH, or BRUERA, a chapelry, in the parish of ST. OSWALD, CHESTER, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 5¼ miles (S. E. by S.) from Chester; containing 3 inhabitants. The chapelry was the original seat of a rectory, to which St. Oswald, a vicarage, was subordinate. The living is now annexed to St. Oswald; the incumbent whereof receives a rent-charge of £17, for which both the tithes of the chapelry have been commuted. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient structure, with a Norman arch between the nave and chancel, and a rich Norman door at the south end; several carved stones are conspicuous in the walls.

CHURWELL, with MORLEY, an ecclesiastical district, in the parish of BATLEY, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Leeds; containing, in the township of Churwell, 1198 inhabitants. The township, which is situated on the road from Leeds to Huddersfield, comprises by computation 540 acres of land, and abounds in excellent coal: it is inhabited by persons chiefly employed in the collieries of Messrs. Tottie and Gaunt, of Leeds, in the woollen-cloth mill of George Crowther, Esq., and Company, and in the tan-yard of Mr. William Morris. This place, and Morley, have been severed from the parish of Batley, and the district church is so conveniently situated as to accommodate both villages. There is a place of worship for Independents, and also a school.

CHUTE (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of ANDOVER, hundred of KINWARDSTONE, Everley and Pewsey, and S. divisions of WILTS, 3¾ miles (N. E.) from Ludgershall; containing 525 inhabitants. It comprises 3000 acres; the surface is hilly, and the scenery pleasingly varied; the soil is chiefly light and stony. The living is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Chute and Chisenbury in the Cathedral of Salisbury (the impropiator), valued in the king's books at £11; net income, £244. Two schools are partly supported by subscription. The late Mr. George Soley, of Kimpton Lodge, near Andover, bequeathed £200 to be vested in the funds, and the proceeds divided among the poor. Jeremy Corderoy, a divine of some celebrity in the 17th century, was born here.

CHUTE-FOREST, an extra-parochial district, in the union of ANDOVER, hundred of KINWARDSTONE, Everley and Pewsey, and S. divisions of WILTS, 4¾ miles (N. E. by N.) from Ludgershall; containing 135 inhabitants. It comprises 1800 acres; the surface is boldly undulated, and the soil light. The tithes for the east and west walks of the forest of Chute and Wakeswood, of which the Dean and Chapter of Sarum are appropriators, have been commuted for £460.

CINQUE-PORTS.—See article on DOVOR.

CIPPENHAM, a liberty, in the parish and hundred of BURNHAM, union of ETON, county of BUCKINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Eton; containing 241 inhabitants. This place is said to have been a residence of the Saxon kings; it is more certain that here was a palace for the monarchs of the Norman line.

CIRCOURT, with GOOSEY, a chapelry, in the union of WANTAGE, parish of STANDFORD-IN-THE-VALE, hundred of OCK, county of BERKS; containing 179 inhabitants.

CIRENCESTER (St. JOHN THE EVANGELIST), a parish, and the head of a union, comprising the borough of Cirencester, which is a hundred of itself, and several tythings in the hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 17 miles (S. E.) from Gloucester, and 89 (W. by N.) from London; and containing 6014 inhabitants. Prior to the arrival of the Romans, this was a British city, called Caer Cori, the "town on the river Corin," now Churn, which the Romans converted into a military station, denominated Corinum: this station, from its position near the intersection of the Fosse-way with the Ermin and Ikeneld streets, was one of considerable extent and importance; and vestiges of the vallum and rampart are yet visible on the south-eastern side of the town, where Roman inscriptions, tessellated pavements, coins, urns, vases, the remains of a hypocaust, and various fragments of masonry, have been found. The Saxons added the name Ccaster, of which and its Roman appellation, the present is a corruption. It was the metropolis of the Dobuni, from whom, in 577, it was taken by Ceawlin, King of Wessex. In 656 it was annexed to the kingdom of Mercia; and, in 879, the Danes under Guthrum, after their memorable defeat by Alfred in the battle of Ethandune, retired hither, where they remained for a year, during the progress of the negotiations which led to their conversion to Christianity, and their settlement in the island. Canute the Great held a general council here in 1020, when, according to the Saxon Chronicle, "Alderman Ethelward was outlawed, and Edwy, King of the Churls." In the war between Stephen and Matilda, Cirencester Castle, of which the earliest notice then occurs, being garrisoned by Robert, Earl of Gloucester, on the part of the empress, was taken and burnt by the king's troops, in 1142; having been rebuilt, it was subsequently garrisoned by the disaffected barons against Henry III., but was taken by the king, who issued his warrant for its immediate demolition. The wall and gates that defended the town continued entire for some time longer. In 1322, Edward II. spent the festival of Christmas here, and soon afterwards convened an assembly of his nobles, to devise means for crushing the conspiracy of Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, and other barons, against his favourite, Hugh le Despencer; and the whole of the royal army was subsequently assembled here. Early in the reign of Henry IV., the Dukes of Albemarle, Surrey, and Exeter, and the Earls of Gloucester and Salisbury, with other persons of distinction, entered into a conspiracy to assassinate the king, and restore the deposed monarch, Richard II. Henry, being informed of this, led an army against them, when some of the principal conspirators, with the forces under them, retired to Cirencester, where they encamped: here they were surprised by the townsmen, and the Duke of Surrey and the Earl of Salisbury were taken and immediately beheaded, on which the troops dispersed. The explosion of hostilities against Charles I. is stated to have occurred in this town, upon a personal attack upon Lord Chandos, who had been appointed to execute the commission of array on behalf of the king; and it was soon afterwards garrisoned by the parliament. It was assaulted by Prince Rupert, and captured, after a sharp conflict of two hours, on the 2nd of February, 1642-3; but was recovered for the parliament by the Earl of Essex, on the 16th of Sept. in the following year: it again fell into the hands of the royalists, but was ultimately surrendered to the parliament. On the landing of the Prince of Orange, in 1688, the inhabitants, influenced by the Duke of Beaufort, declared for James II.; and Lord Lovelace, on his march through the town, with a party to join the prince, was attacked by Captain Lorange, of the county militia, made prisoner, and sent to Gloucester gaol. In this encounter flowed the first blood that was shed in the Revolution.

The town is pleasantly situated, and consists of four principal, and several smaller, streets. It was anciently of much greater extent, the walls having inclosed an area of two miles in circuit. The houses, which are chiefly of stone, are well built, and many of the more respectable are detached; the place is lighted, the foot-paths are paved with small stones, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water. There is a society called the Cirencester and Gloucestershire Agricultural Association. Races were once held annually near the town. But little trade is carried on, the cloth manufacture, formerly extensive, having declined: some knives of a peculiar and superior quality are made for the use of curriers; and there are a small carpet-manufactory, and three breweries. The Thames and Severn canal passes in the vicinity, a branch of which comes up to the town; and a railway to Swindon was opened in May, 1841. The market is on Monday, for corn and provisions, and on Friday for provisions only; the latter was once considerable for wool, but, since the decline of the woollen manufacture, it has been much neglected. Fairs are held on Easter-Tuesday and Nov. 8th, and statute fairs on the Monday before and the Monday after Oct. 11th. By charter granted by Henry IV., Cirencester was constituted a separate hundred, co-extensive with the BOROUGH, the privileges of which still exist, and two high constables are annually chosen, though the town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold petty-sessions here. It sent representatives to a great council in the 11th of Edward III., but did not acquire the permanent privilege of returning two burgesses until the year 1571, by grant from Elizabeth. The right of election was formerly vested in the resident householders not receiving alms (except "inhabitants of the abbey, the Embury and Sperringate-lane"), about 500 in number; but the limits of the borough, which comprised only 84 acres, were for elective purposes increased by the act of the 2nd and 3rd of William IV., cap. 64, so as to embrace the whole of the parish, comprehending by estimation 5100 acres, and the franchise was extended to the £10 householders. The steward and bailiff of the manor are returning officers. A court of requests is held for the recovery of debts under 40s., established by act of parliament in 1792; and there is a court leet annually, at which the steward for the manor appoints two high, and fourteen petty, constables, two of the latter being for each of the seven wards into which the borough is divided.

The LIVING is a vicarage not in charge, in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £99, and the vicarial for £240, and a rent-charge of £5 is paid to the rector of Siddington. The church is a magnificent structure, in the decorated English style, erected in the fifteenth century, with a lofty embattled tower, crowned by pinnacles; its interior and exterior are richly adorned, and it contains several chapels of exquisite beauty, and many monuments. A fund, producing £267 per annum, was bequeathed for keeping it in repair. Two other churches, one dedicated to St. Cecilia, and the other to St. Lawrence, have long been in ruins. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians. The free grammar school was founded by Bishop Ruthal, and the original endowment was augmented by Queen Mary, with £20 per annum, payable out of the exchequer; the master is appointed by the Lord Chancellor. The Blue-coat school, established in 1714, was afterwards endowed by Thomas Powell, Esq., with £15 per annum, part of an annuity issuing from the exchequer for 99 years, and a moiety of the revenue of Maskelyne's estate; to which the lord chancellor, in 1737, added £20 per annum, out of property left for charitable purposes by Mrs. Rebecca Powell; and in 1744 Mrs. Powell's executor assigned the interest of £562. 7. 6. as a provisional supply after the expiration of the annuity. The Yellow-coat school was founded and endowed, in 1792, by Mrs. Powell; the income is about £320. There are also two Lancastrian schools, a day and Sunday school, and an infants' school, all supported by subscription. St. John's hospital, for three men and three women, was founded by Henry I., and endowed with land and reserved rents amounting to between £30 and £40 per annum. St. Lawrence's hospital, for a master and two poor women, was founded in the time of Edward III., by Edith, proprietress of the manor of Wiggold; it has a small endowment, and is under the controul of Earl Bathurst. St. Thomas's hospital was erected by Sir William Nottingham, attorney-general to Henry IV., and endowed with £6. 18. 8. per annum. In 1620, Mrs. Elizabeth Bridges founded an almshouse, with a small endowment, which has been subsequently augmented; and there are various minor bequests for the benefit of the poor, and for apprenticing children. The union of Cirencester comprises 39 parishes or places, of which 33 are in the county of Gloucester, and 6 in that of Wilts; and contains a population of 20,726.

Henry I., in 1117, built an abbey for Black canons, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, which he and his successors richly endowed; it was a mitred abbey, and in the 26th of Henry VIII., its revenue was estimated at £1051. 7. 1.: the remains consist of two gateways and a large barn. In a field called the Querns, to the west of the town, near the Roman wall, are the remains of an amphitheatre. Grismond's Tower, a circular hill about a quarter of a mile westward, now converted into an ice-house by Earl Bathurst, was discovered, on examination, to be a Roman tumulus, containing several large urns full of ashes and burnt bones. Richard of Cirencester, author of a History and Itinerary of Britain in the time of the Romans; Thomas Ruthall, Bishop of Durham, and counsellor to Henry VII.; and Caleb Hillier Parry, M.D., eminent in his profession, and father of Capt. Sir Edward Parry, R.N., the celebrated navigator, were natives of the place.

CLACK, a hamlet, in the parish of LINEHAM, hundred of KINGSBRIDGE, Swindon and N. divisions of WILTS, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Wootton-Basset. Fairs are held on April 5th and Oct. 10th, for horned-cattle, pigs, sheep, horses, and cheese.

CLACKHEATON.—See CLECKHEATON.

CLACTON, GREAT (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union and hundred of TENDRING, N. division of ESSEX, $14\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Colchester; containing 1296 inhabitants. This parish, which was formerly the residence of the bishops of London, who had a palace here, is bounded on the south by the North Sea, and comprises an area of about fifteen miles in circumference; the soil in some parts is light and of inferior quality, and in others, especially towards the coast, a fine strong loam, producing abundant crops. A fair is held on the 29th of June. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the donative of Little Holland annexed, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of F. Nassau, Esq.; impropriators, Col. Harding and others. The great tithes have been commuted for £1146. 7., and the vicarial for £250, and a rent-charge of £66 is paid to Travers' Knights of Windsor; the glebe contains $4\frac{1}{2}$ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a plain edifice, with a tower surmounted by a shingled spire. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Some horns and bones of enormous size were lately found in the clay which forms the cliffs on this part of the coast; among them were the grinding tooth of an elephant, some colossal horns of the wild bull, and part of the skull of a rhinoceros.

CLACTON, LITTLE (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union and hundred of TENDRING, N. division of ESSEX, $12\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Colchester; containing 547 inhabitants. It forms part of a small district mentioned in the Norman survey under the name Clackintuna; the lands are low, and of a great portion of them the soil is strong and heavy. The village is pleasantly situated round a small green, on which a fair is held on the 25th of July. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; patron and impropriator, F. Nassau, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £612. 10., and the vicarial for £156; the glebe comprises nearly 3 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a small ancient edifice, with a turret of wood.

CLAIFE, a township, in the parish of HAWKSHEAD, union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Hawkshead; containing 541 inhabitants. This truly picturesque district consists of a ridge of hills extending throughout its whole length from north to south, between the lakes of Windermere and Esthwaite; the scenery is exquisitely beautiful and strikingly diversified, and from one point of view, on the western bank of Windermere, where is a small house belonging to H. Curwen, Esq., and thence called the Station, the surrounding objects appear in all their grandeur and variety. Nearly about the centre of the township, on the shore of Windermere, a small peninsula stretches into the lake, at the extremity of which is an inn much frequented by tourists, whence there is a ferry to a similar peninsula projecting from the opposite shore, for the transport of passengers, luggage, and horses; at this passage, which is little more than 500 yards across, forty-seven persons were drowned, from the effects of a storm, in 1635. In the northern part of the township is a small sheet of water, called Blellam Tarn, well stored with various kinds of fish. At Colthouse is a place of worship for the Society of Friends; and in the village of Farther-Sawrey is a school, of ancient foundation, to which three members of the family of Braithwaite contributed, at various times, sums amounting to £465, the interest whereof is paid to the master. The school-house was rebuilt in 1835.

CLAINES (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of DROITWICH, Lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Worcester; containing, with Whistones tything, 6395 inhabitants. This parish, a considerable part of which lies within the borough of Worcester, is situated on the river Severn; the Worcester and Birmingham canal passes near its southern, and the Droitwich canal along its northern, boundary, where it joins the Severn. It is intersected by the Worcester and Shrewsbury, and the Worcester and Birmingham roads, and comprises by measurement 4532 acres, of which 2000 are arable, and nearly all the rest pasture. In the parish is the island of Bevere, formed by the rivulet Beverhern, memorable as having twice afforded refuge to the inhabitants of Worcester; first in 1041, from the fury of King Hardicantute, on account of their refusing to pay the Danegelt, and next, in 1637, from a dreadful pestilence then raging in the city. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £246; patron and impropiator, Sir Offley Penbury Wakeman, Bart.: the glebe consists of 21 acres, in the parish of Hanbury. In addition to the parochial church, a chapel, dedicated to St. George, was erected in 1830, in the early English style, with a tower, at an expense of £3345. Some schools are supported; and a fund of about £35 per annum, arising from bequests, is applied to the purchase of clothing, bread, &c., for the poor. The ancient hospital of St. Oswald was founded prior to 1268. On the site of the mansion of White Ladies was the Benedictine nunnery of White-stone, or Whistones, founded by Walter de Cantelupe, Bishop of Worcester, in 1255: to this house Charles II. retired after the decisive battle of Worcester.

CLANABOROUGH (St. PETROCK), a parish, in the union of CREDITON, hundred of NORTH TAWTON, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Crediton; containing 69 inhabitants, and consisting of 875 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 17. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £95, and the glebe comprises about 45 acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

CLANDON, EAST, a parish, in the union of GUILDFORD, Second division of the hundred of WOKING, W. division of SURREY, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Guildford; containing 293 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1430 acres, of which between 400 and 500 are uncultivated. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 6. $10\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £152; patron, the Earl of Lovelace. Two small schools are partly supported by the rector and the family at Hatchlands.

CLANDON, WEST, a parish, in the union of GUILDFORD, Second division of the hundred of WOKING, W. division of SURREY, 3 miles (N. E. by E.) from Guildford; containing 407 inhabitants. It comprises about 990 acres, of which 384 are arable, 338 meadow and pasture, 80 woodland, and 160 common. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 10., and in the patronage of the Earl of Onslow, who has two seats in the parish: the tithes have been commuted for £160, and the glebe contains 20 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is in the early English style, with a low tower on the north side. A national school is chiefly supported by subscription.

CLANFIELD (St. STEPHEN), a parish, in the union of WITNEY, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (N.) from Farringdon; containing 584 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 6. $5\frac{1}{2}$.; patrons, H. Elliott and William Aldworth, Esqrs.; impropiators, G. H. Elliott and H. Collett, Esqrs. The great tithes have been commuted for £300, the vicarial for £50, and tithes payable to the vicar of Bampton for £100; the glebe comprises seven acres. The church is an ancient structure, in the early English style, and has, in the chancel, a brass recording the death of Leonard Wilmot at Clanfield, in 1608.

CLANFIELD (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of CATHERINGTON, hundred of FINCH-DEAN, Petersfield and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Petersfield; containing 239 inhabitants. This parish, which is about three miles to the south-west of Butser Hill, comprises a considerable tract of various qualities of soil; much of the surface is open, and in the lower grounds the land is rich and fertile. The village is pleasantly situated within a mile of the road to Petersfield. The living is a rectory, united to that of Chalton, and valued in the king's books at £11: the tithes have been commuted for £178, and the glebe contains nearly 63 acres. A small school is partly supported by subscription.

CLANVILLE, a hamlet, in the parish of CASTLE-CARY, union of WINCANTON, hundred of CATSASH, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 50 inhabitants.

CLAPCOT, a liberty, in the parish of ALLHALLOWS, WALLINGFORD, union of WALLINGFORD, hundred of MORETON, county of BERKS; containing 43 inhabitants.

CLAPHAM (St. THOMAS à BECKET), a parish, in the union of BEDFORD, forming, with the parishes of Milton-Ernest and Oakley, a detached portion of the hundred of STODDEN, county of BEDFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Bedford; and containing 370 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 13. 4.; net income, £237; patron, Lord Carteret; impropiator, Earl of Ashburnham. The church is a very ancient structure, with a tower remarkable for the simplicity and rudeness of its architecture. Clapham was formerly a chapelry in the parish of Oakley, and the inhabitants still bury there. Charitable donations have been assigned, producing £20 per annum, for apprenticing boys.

CLAPHAM (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of WANDSWORTH and CLAPHAM, E. division of the hundred of BRIXTON, and of the county of SURREY, 4 miles (S.) from London; containing 12,106 inhabitants. This village has, for many years, been one of the most respectable in the environs of the metropolis. The road from London, particularly that part of it called Clapham Rise, has on each side large and elegant houses, with gardens and lawns in front, forming a continuous line leading to the common, which occupies a space of 200 acres, surrounded by noble mansions and villas, and from the improvements that have been made by the formation of carriage-drives, and the plantation of trees and shrubs, assumes the appearance of a park. On the east side a handsome crescent has been recently formed, opposite to which is a range of houses named the Grove; the area is tastefully laid out, and the approach from the common is formed by a well-constructed iron palisade, on each side of which is a stately mansion. In that part of the parish situated towards Brixton, which was formerly called Bleakhall Farm, considerable alterations have also taken place; new roads have been made; a new church and several villas have been erected, and the spot is now designated Clapham New Park. Great improvements have likewise been made towards the north-east, by the erection of numerous neat houses and cottages. The parish is watched and lighted under an act of parliament obtained in 1785, and is within the limits of the metropolitan police establishment; the road from London is lighted with gas, main pipes having been laid down by the Phoenix Gas Company, from which a sufficient quantity is distributed to every part of the village and its vicinity. The inhabitants are supplied with water from the South Lambeth water-works, and from an excellent spring on that side of the common leading to Wandsworth, opened in 1825, near another which had supplied the village for more than a century: this spring, the water of which is peculiarly soft, provides upwards of 600 hogsheads per day, and nearly twenty families derive employment and support by conveying it to the houses of the inhabitants at a moderate expense. The subscription library, to which a commodious reading-room has been added, contains a well-assorted and extensive collection; it has been established for nearly half a century, and is liberally supported. Clapham is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty-session at the office of their clerk, every Saturday; and within that of the court of requests for the borough of Southwark, for the recovery of debts under £5. The acting coroner for the district is appointed at the court of the duchy of Lancaster, within the jurisdiction of which a part of the parish is comprehended: the parochial affairs are under the direction of a select vestry.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 0. 10., and in the patronage of W. B. Atkins, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £488. 14., and the glebe comprises 11 acres. The church, which anciently belonged to the priory at Merton, was, with the exception of the north aisle, which was left standing for the performance of the burial service, taken down under an act of parliament in 1774, and a new church erected in the following year, at an expense of £11,000, on the north side of the common. It is a neat structure of brick, ornamented with stone, with a dome turret, and having a handsome portico of stone, extending the whole width of the western front, which was added to it in 1812; the interior is characterised by a chaste simplicity of style; the east window is ornamented with a well-executed painting on glass, and there are some monumental tablets. The remaining aisle of the old church, which was situated in that part of the village leading to Wandsworth, near the old manor-house, was taken down in 1815, and a neat proprietary chapel, in some respects dependent on the mother church, was erected, under an act of parliament, at a cost of £5000, and dedicated to St. Paul. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £200; patron, the Rector. The burial-ground, which is spacious, contains many ancient tombs and monuments. A proprietary episcopal chapel, dedicated to St. James, has recently been built at Clapham New Park, and is a spacious and elegant structure, in the decorated English style, with a graceful and richly-crocketed campanile turret; the western front is ornamented with panelled buttresses relieved by tracery, dividing it into three doorways under richly moulded arches. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of six Trustees; net income, £500. There are two places of worship for Independents, and one for Baptists. A parochial school for girls is supported by subscription: the premises, originally built at the expense of the inhabitants, on ground given for that purpose by Richard Atkins, Esq., lord of the manor, were taken down and rebuilt in 1781, and in 1809 considerably enlarged. A handsome national school was erected, in 1839, for boys; and attached to it is a savings' bank. A British school was also erected in 1839, at an expense of nearly £1700.

CLAPHAM, a parish, in the union of SUTTON, hundred of BRIGHTFORD, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX, 5 miles (N. W.) from Worthing; containing 262 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Portsmouth, by way of Arundel, to Brighton, and comprises about 1735 acres, of which 550 are arable, 300 pasture, 505 down, and 380 wood. Michelgrove, the principal estate, was for centuries the property and residence of the Shelley family, of whom Judge Shelley entertained Henry VIII. at his magnificent house here; it subsequently became the property of R. W. Walker, Esq., who, in 1828, sold it to the Duke of Norfolk, by whom the mansion, erected by the Shelleys, was taken down. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £14; net income, £120; patron, his Grace; impropiators, for a moiety of the tithes amounting to £120, Merton College, Oxford. The church is in the early English style, with later additions, and was repewed in 1819, at the expense of R. W. Walker, Esq.; in the chancel are several interesting monuments to the Shelley family.

CLAPHAM, a parish, in the union of SETTLE, W. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 6 miles (N. W. by W.) from Settle; containing, with the townships of Austwick, Clapham with Newby, and Lawkland, 1853 inhabitants, of whom 890 are in the township of Clapham with Newby. This parish comprises by computation 24,340 acres, of which a very small portion is arable, about 1000 woodland, and the remainder one vast tract of moor of mountainous elevation; within the parish is the base of Ingleborough mountain, and the prevailing scenery is of bold and romantic character. The manor of Clapham, which extends only over part of this township, was formerly the property of the De Clapham family, from whom it was purchased in the reign of Charles I., by the Morleys, whose descendant, the Rev. Thomas Wilson Morley, of Birkby, is the present lord. The substratum abounds with limestone, and near Ingleborough Hall, the seat of James W. Farrer, Esq., is one of those remarkable caverns that frequently occur in limestone districts, though seldom of such extent, or possessing features so strikingly interesting. This cavern, which is called Clapham Cave, was many years since explored for 50 yards, and found to contain several chambers, connected by passages, through which a stream of pure water, rising in the mountain, pursued its course and flowed into the village. In 1837, a sudden and very considerable increase in the stream issuing from what was supposed to be the extremity of the cavern, led to further research, by the Earl of Eldon and the Rev. Mr. Farrer; and on an opening being made, a spacious and lofty region was discovered at least 880 yards in length, to which the chambers previously known were but a vestibule. This magnificent cavern, though in some parts so contracted in height as to render it necessary for the visiter to stoop, is generally, both in width and elevation, of ample and stately dimensions, resembling the interior of a stupendous baronial mansion; the roof is richly adorned with stalactites and other beautiful concretions, and the general effect exceeds in splendour any thing of the kind yet discovered in the kingdom. The village is situated on the stream above noticed; fairs for cattle are held on Sept. 27th and Oct. 2nd. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 17. 1.; net income, £150; patron and appropriator, the Bishop of Chester, with a reversion at his death to the Bishop of Ripon. The church is an ancient structure. A chapel was erected in the village of Austwick in 1840. George Ellis, Esq., in 1711, bequeathed property now producing £89 per annum, of which he appropriated £6. 13. 4. to a master, for teaching children, and the remainder to the incumbent: there is a school at Newby, and a school-room was built in the village of Clapham, in 1824, for the purpose of this endowment, which has been augmented to £15 per annum by subsequent bequests.

CLAPTON, a parish, in the hundred of ARMINGFORD, union of CAXTON and ARRINGTON, county of CAMBRIDGE, 6 miles (S. E. by S.) from Caxton; containing, with Croydon, 441 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with the vicarage of Croydon, and valued in the king's books at £4. 9. 7.

CLAPTON (St. James), a parish, in the union of STOW-ON-THE-WOLD, Lower division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Northleach; containing 117 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the rectory of Bourton-on-the-Water.

CLAPTON, a hamlet, in the parish of St. John, Hackney, union of HACKNEY, Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 3 miles (N. by E.) from London; containing 5475 inhabitants. This place is divided into Upper and Lower Clapton: the latter consists of various ranges of handsome buildings, with several large detached mansions and villas on both sides of the road, extending from Hackney church for about a mile, occasionally interspersed with ranges of smaller houses and shops: the former, from Lower Clapton to Stamford Hill, consists of numerous well-built and spacious houses of modern erection, with grounds tastefully laid out, besides the Old and New Terraces, of which the latter forms a lofty and extensive pile. The houses are supplied with water from a reservoir at Lower Clapton, belonging to the East London Waterworks Company, into which it is conveyed from the river Lea by a steam-engine. There is no trade, except what is requisite for the supply of the immediate neighbourhood; the nursery-grounds are extensive, and the adjacent country is richly wooded, and comprises much pleasing scenery. A proprietary chapel was built at Upper Clapton in 1777, which has lately been enlarged; and in 1841, a church was built, upon a piece of ground given by the Rev. T. B. Powell, at a cost of £6300, in addition to which, a considerable sum, derived from private sources, has been expended on embellishments. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; and connected with the chapel, is a national school. The London Orphan Asylum at Lower Clapton, founded in 1813, for the maintenance and education of destitute orphans, of whom about 400 are now in the institution, is a handsome building of light-coloured brick, consisting of a centre, forming a chapel, with an elegant portico of four lofty fluted columns of the Grecian-Doric order, supporting a triangular pediment, and connected with two spacious wings by open corridors of pillars of the same order.

CLAPTON (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of THRAPSTON, hundred of NAVISFORD, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Thrapston; containing 119 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the borders of the county of Huntingdon, consists of 1850 acres, and is intersected by the road between Oundle and Huntingdon. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 3. 9., and in the gift of W. P. W. Freeman, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £295. 16., and there are 46 acres of glebe.

CLAPTON, a tything, in the parish and hundred of CREWKERNE, union of CHARD, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 90 inhabitants.

CLAPTON, a hamlet, in the parish of MAPERTON, union of WINCANTON, hundred of CATSASH, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 38 inhabitants.

CLAPTON, a tything, in the parish of MIDSUMMER-NORTON, union of CLUTTON, hundred of CHEWTON, E. division of SOMERSET, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Shepton-Mallet; containing 147 inhabitants.

CLAPTON-IN-GORDANO (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of BEDMINSTER, hundred of PORTBURY, E. division of SOMERSET, $9\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Bristol; containing 138 inhabitants. In this parish is situated the tything of Clapton-Wick, which belongs to the parish of Portbury. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 9. 2., and in the patronage of James Adam Gordon, Esq. : the tithes have been commuted for £200, and the glebe comprises 43 acres.

CLAPTON-WICK, a tything, locally situated in the parish of CLAPTON-IN-GORDANO, but forming part of the parish of PORTBURY, union of BEDMINSTER, hundred of PORTBURY, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 45 inhabitants.

CLARE (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a market-town and parish, in the union and hundred of RISBRIDGE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 15 miles (S. S. W.) from Bury-St. Edmund's, and 55½ (N. E. by N.) from London; containing, with the hamlet of Chilton, 1700 inhabitants. This place, which is of great antiquity, derived considerable importance during the Saxon heptarchy from being on the frontier of the kingdom of East Anglia; and after the Conquest it was distinguished for having given the title of Earl to the family of De Clare, and that of Duke to Lionel, third son of Edward III., who was created Duke of Clarence. George III. revived the title in the person of his third son, Prince William Henry, who, in 1789, was created a peer of the realm, as Duke of Clarence. To the south of the town are the ruins of a castle, formerly the baronial residence of the Earls of Clare, and equal to any of those structures in feudal grandeur and magnificence: the site of the fortifications, which may be distinctly traced, comprehended an area of 30 acres. On the summit of a high mount, evidently of artificial construction, are the remains of an ancient keep, a circular building of flints, strongly cemented with mortar, and strengthened with buttresses, which, from its situation near the frontier, is supposed to have been erected either prior to or during the heptarchy. The honour of Clare is now annexed to the duchy of Lancaster. The TOWN is situated on the river Stour, which separates this county from Essex, on the south; the houses are in general old, but many new ones have been recently erected. The ancient market-place has been considerably enlarged, by pulling down many unsightly buildings; and a handsome corn-exchange was erected in 1838. The streets are spacious; the inhabitants are amply supplied with water; and the approaches to the town are gradually improving. The market is on Monday; and fairs are held on Easter-Tuesday and July 26th, chiefly for toys and pedlery. The county magistrates hold monthly and petty-sessions for the division here; and the courts baron of Erbury, and Stoke with Chilton, and a court for the duchy of Lancaster, are also held at this place.

The parish comprises by computation 2178 acres. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 18. 9., and in the patronage of the Queen, in right of the duchy of Lancaster; net income, about £200. The church is a large, handsome, and ancient structure, chiefly in the decorated English style, with a square tower, strengthened by buttresses, and of an earlier date than the body: the interior, which has been improved by the heightening of the nave, and the addition of side aisles, is richly ornamented, and contains an elegantly-designed font, in the later English style, and a brass eagle on a pedestal, with wings displayed, forming the reading-desk. In the chancel are said to have been interred the remains of Lionel, Duke of Clarence, who died in 1368, at Piedmont, and is supposed to have been born here. The church has within a few years been repaired and internally beautified, and a gallery has been erected, containing 640 additional sittings. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents. Mr. William Cadge, in 1669, bequeathed a farm, now let for £74. per annum, appropriating £10 per annum to a master, for teaching boys, and £15 per annum to the clothing of widows; and there are several charitable bequests for distribution among the poor, who have also the privilege of depasturing 40 milch cows on a common, comprising 62 acres of land. To the south-west of the town are the remains of Clare Priory, founded by Eluric, or Alfric, Earl of Clare, for Secular canons, and which Gilbert de Clare, in 1090, gave to the Benedictine abbey of Bec, in Normandy, to which it was a cell till 1124, when his son Richard removed the monks to the village of Stoke. Joan d'Acre, daughter of Edward I., and wife of Gilbert de Clare, who was a great benefactress to this establishment, is traditionally said to have been interred in the chapel, which has been converted into a barn: the priory, now a private residence, though it has undergone considerable repairs and alterations, still retains much of its original character. A monastery for Augustine monks is said to have been founded here in 1248, but by whom is not known; and, according to Robert Aske, who wrote in the reign of Henry VIII., the following persons were, among others of less distinction, buried in it, namely, Richard, Earl of Clare; Lionel, Duke of Clarence; Joan d'Acre, and her son, Sir Edward Montheimer; Dame Alice Spencer; Sir John Beauchamp, Knt.; William Capel, and Eleanor, his wife; the Lady Margaret Scroope; Sir Edmund; last of the Mortimers, earls of March; Sir Thomas Grey, and his first wife; and Sir Thomas Clopton, and his wife. To the north-west of the town are evident marks of a Roman camp.

CLAREBOROUGH (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of EAST RETFORD, North-Clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 2½ miles (N. E. by E.) from East Retford, containing, with the hamlets of Bollom, Gringley, Little Gringley, Moorgate, and Waltham, 2207 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the great north road, and intersected by the Chesterfield and Gainsborough canal, and skirted on the west by the river Idle, comprises 3407*a. 2r. 21p.*, whereof the township of Clareborough contains 1230*a. 3r. 20p.*: the soil is in general a good productive clay, and fine gypsum is found, in pits at Gringley, which is used as plaster of Paris, and with which most of the houses at Retford, in its vicinity, are floored instead of being planked. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 15. 4.; net income, £331; patrons, Trustees of the late Rev. C. Simeon and others; impropiators, the family of Hutchinson, and others. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1776; the glebe contains 90 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a small edifice, built by Archbishop Roger, and endowed by Sewell, Archbishop of York, in 1258; it consists of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, with a square embattled tower. A handsome chapel of ease was opened in 1829, which is dedicated to St. Saviour, and contains 1065 sittings. At Bolam are the remains of an ancient chapel, and some caves hewn in the rock, in which many of the inhabitants reside.

CLARENCE-PORT, a small port, in the parish of BILLINGHAM, N. E. division of STOCKTON ward, county of DURHAM. This port has been recently formed at the base of Haverton Hill, on the north of the river Tees, near its mouth, for the greater facility of shipping the coal conveyed by the Clarence and Stockton and Darlington railways, both of which have their termini at this place. The quantity of coal brought by the Clarence railway alone, averages 400,000 tons annually, and, by means of four drops constructed for the purpose, 81 keels can be loaded in the short space of twelve hours.

CLARENDON-PARK, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union and hundred of ALDERBURY, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Salisbury; containing 181 inhabitants. At this place were anciently two palaces, termed the King's and the Queen's; and at a very remote period it was a royal chase. Here Edward the Martyr spent the day preceding his assassination. Henry II. frequently kept his court here, and in 1164 held the council which enacted the celebrated edicts called "The Constitutions of Clarendon," defining the limits of ecclesiastical authority in England. Richard I., John, and Henry III., often resided at the place; and in 1357, when the plague was raging in London, and in many of the principal towns in the kingdom, Edward III., with his royal prisoners, the kings of France and Scotland, passed the summer at his palace of Clarendon, of which only a lofty wall is now standing. The park was inclosed by act of parliament in the sixteenth of Charles II., and granted to General Monk, who had been created Duke of Albemarle; and in the same reign, Clarendon gave the title of earl to Edward Hyde, a native of Dinton, in this county, lord high chancellor of England, ancestor of the queens Mary II. and Anne, and author of the History of the Rebellion. The Roman way from Winchester to Old Sarum passes through the liberty.

CLARETON, a township, in the parish of ALLERTON-MAULEVERER, Upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Knaresborough; containing 19 inhabitants. The township, which is the property of Lord Stourton, comprises by computation 486 acres of land. The village is situated to the west of the road between Wetherby and Boroughbridge. Claro Hill, which gives name to the wapentake, is in the township, and is supposed to have been the place on which the Wittenagemote, or public meetings of the district, were anciently held.

CLAREWOOD, a township, in the parish of CORBRIDGE, union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Hexham; containing 55 inhabitants. It is a small village, seated on an eminence, north from the Roman station of Halton Chesters. Adjoining is a small landsale colliery.

CLATFORD, a tything, in the parish of PRESHUTE, union of MARLBOROUGH, hundred of SELKLEY, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and N. divisions of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Marlborough; containing 90 inhabitants. An alien priory to the abbey of St. Victor, in Caletto, in Normandy, was founded here by Sir Roger Mortimer, in the time of William the Conqueror, and granted by Henry VI. to Eton College.

CLATFORD, GOODWORTH (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of ANDOVER, hundred of WHERWELL, Andover and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 miles (S.) from Andover; containing 414 inhabitants. It is intersected by the Southampton and Andover canal. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10; patron and impropiator, W. Iremonger, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for £165, and the glebe comprises 75 acres. A parochial school was endowed with £1000 by the late Rev. Lascelles Iremonger.

CLATFORD, UPPER (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of ANDOVER, Andover and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S.) from Andover; containing 620 inhabitants. It comprises 2131a. 2r., of which the principal portion is good arable land; the surface is varied with hills, and is intersected by the Southampton and Andover canal. The manufacture of paper is carried on to some extent, and there is an iron-foundry. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £22, and in the patronage of the Rev. Edward Frowd: the tithes have been commuted for £525, and the glebe comprises 38 acres. A parochial school is supported by the rector. At Bury Hill, in the parish, are the remains of an encampment.

CLATTERCOTT, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union and hundred of BANBURY, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (N.) from Banbury; containing 15 inhabitants. Here was formerly a small religious house, dedicated to St. Leonard, and endowed by Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, for brethren of the Sempringham order; it was once an hospital for lepers, and the establishment, at the Dissolution, consisted of a prior and four canons, whose revenue was estimated at £34. 19. 11. per annum. There are some very slight remains.

CLATWORTHY (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of WILLITON, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANERS, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (N. W.) from Wiveliscombe; containing 309 inhabitants. It is situated on the small river Tone, which falls into the Bristol Channel at Bridgwater, in confluence with the river Parret; the number of acres is about 2800, and the soil is tolerably fertile, lying on a substratum of clay slate; interspersed with white flint or quartz. Slate for roofing was formerly quarried. An act for inclosing lands was passed in 1842. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 10. 5., and in the gift of G. W. Carew, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £268, and the glebe comprises 93 acres. The church is a very ancient structure. There is an encampment of about 14 acres in extent, but whether of Roman or British origin is not clearly known.

CLAUGHTON, with GRANGE, a township, in the parish of BIDSTONE, union and Lower division of the hundred of WIRRAL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Great Neston; containing 240 inhabitants.

CLAUGHTON, a township, in the parish and union of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Garstang; containing 772 inhabitants. The linen manufacture is carried on. The Lancaster and Preston railway passes through the township. A commutation for the vicarial tithes has been awarded, amounting to £350. There is a place of worship for Roman Catholics.

CLAUGHTON (St. Chad), a parish, in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 7 miles (N. E. by E.) from Lancaster; containing 118 inhabitants. It comprises a large tract of land, of which the surface is beautifully diversified, rising on one side into hills, and on the other spreading into a rich and fertile vale, through which the river Lune pursues its rapid course. The soil is favourable for grazing: there are some good quarries of flagstone. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 13. 10., and in the patronage of the Heiress of the late Thomas Fenwick, Esq.; net income, £145. The church was rebuilt in 1815. There is a day and Sunday school. Near Claughton Hall, an ancient building in a dilapidated state, are the remains of a Roman Catholic chapel.

CLAVERDON (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of STRATFORD-ON-AVON, Henley division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 3½ miles (E. by S.) from Henley-in-Arden; containing, with the hamlet of Langley, 711 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Henley to Warwick, and comprises by measurement 3580 acres; its north-eastern boundary is skirted by the canal from Stratford to Birmingham. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Norton-Lindsey annexed, valued in the king's books at £5. 12. 1.; net income, £265; patron and appropriator, Archdeacon of Worcester. The great tithes have been commuted for £672. 3., and the vicarial for £229. 10.; the appropriator's glebe comprises 33 acres, and the vicar's 5 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church, with the exception of the chancel and tower, was rebuilt in the years 1827-8, and contains a handsome monument, in the chancel, belonging to the Spencer family, who formerly possessed a large mansion in the parish. John Matthews, about the year 1526, left property, now worth about £96 per annum, for the repair of the church, out of which funds a village school is also supported.

CLAVERING (St. Mary and St. Clement), a parish, in the union of SAFFRON-WALDEN, hundred of CLAVERING, N. division of ESSEX, 7½ miles (N. by W.) from Bishop-Stortford; containing 1172 inhabitants. The parish borders on the county of Hertford, and comprises by computation 3691 acres, of which about 500 are in woods and plantations; the soil is various, consisting of chalk, clay, sand, and a light gravel. A small stream, rising in Arkesden, unites with the rivulet from Langley, and pursues its course through the parish to the river Stort. The village is small and irregularly built, but contains some respectable houses, and the surrounding scenery is agreeably diversified. The living is an endowed vicarage, with that of Langley annexed, valued in the king's books at £22. 13. 11½; patrons and improprators, Governors of Christ's Hospital: the great tithes have been commuted for £504, and the vicarial for £465. 6., and the glebe contains 7¼ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a spacious and handsome edifice of stone, with an embattled tower. There is a place of worship for Independents.

CLAVERLEY (All Saints), a parish, in the union of BRIDGENORTH, Hales-Owén division of the hundred of BRIMSTREE, S. division of SALOP, 6 miles (E.) from Bridgenorth; containing 1669 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 8145 acres, about three-quarters of which are arable, and the rest pasture. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £100; patron and improprator, Thomas Whitmore, Esq.: the great tithes have been commuted for £2048. 13., and the remainder for £12. The church is a handsome structure, in the later English style, with a high tower surmounted by pinnacles; the pews have been lately re-arranged, and galleries built. A school was founded in 1659, by Richard Dovey, who endowed it with an estate; in 1702, John Sanders devised £5 a year for clothing the boys; and Richard Bennett, in 1794, left £100 in aid of the charity, which is now united with a national school.

CLAVERTON, a parish, in the union of BATH, hundred of HAMPTON and CLAVERTON, though locally in the hundred of BATH-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET, 2½ miles (E. S. E.) from Bath; containing 177 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the new road to Warminster, and separated from Bath by a hill round which the river Avon winds its picturesque course, comprises by computation 1200 acres: there are some quarries of excellent freestone. The old baronial manor-house, which retained the marks of an assault from Cromwell's army, who fired some cannon-shot, by which the walls were perforated, was removed by the late John Vivian, Esq., who had recently purchased the property and erected a handsome modern seat on a different site. The village is situated in a romantic valley, environed by bold and beautifully wooded hills, and through which passes the Kennet and Avon canal. In the reign of Henry III. a grant was obtained, whereby Claverton and the village of Hampton were exempted from the jurisdiction of the hundred, and constituted a liberty, which is now within the jurisdiction of the court of requests held in the city of Bath, for the recovery of debts under £10. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 6. 10½., and in the gift of George Vivian, Esq.: the tithes, exclusive of £6 per annum paid by the Canal Company, have been commuted for £162. 11., and a rent-charge of £18. 10. is paid to the rector of St. Mary-on-the-Hill; the glebe contains upwards of 34½ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is an elegant structure, in the later English style, having a square embattled tower overspread with ivy, and from its beautiful situation forms an attractive feature. The valley is remarkable for its rich variety of botanical specimens; and a sunken tract across the Downs, said to be traceable to the river Severn, is supposed to be the Wansdyke which formed the boundary of the West Saxon kingdom. Richard Graves, author of the Spiritual Quixote, and other works, was rector of the parish, where he died in 1804, having held the incumbency fifty-four years; and Mr. Allen, the inventor of the plan for the cross-post delivery of letters, who built the mansion of Prior Park, and was the friend and patron of Pope and other poets, was interred in a large mausoleum in the churchyard.

CLAWRPLWYF, a hamlet, in the parish of MYNYD-DYSLWYN, union of NEWPORT, Lower division of the hundred of WENTLOOG, county of MONMOUTH; containing 2055 inhabitants.

CLAWTON, a parish, in the union of HOLSWORTHY, hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, Holsworthy and N. divisions of DEVON, 3½ miles (S.) from Holsworthy; containing 639 inhabitants. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy; net income, £75; patron and incumbent, Rev. T. Melhuish: There is good freestone for building in the neighbourhood.

CLAXBY (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (S.) from Alford; containing 132 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1047 acres, of which the soil lies on a substratum of chalk interspersed with marl; limestone is obtained, and, mixed with marl, is used for manure. In the centre of the parish is a fine spring, issuing from a chalk hill, and affording a good supply of water. The living is a discharged vicarage with Derthorpe, united to the rectory of Well, and valued in the king's books at £5. 3. 1½: the church is a small thatched building. Here are vestiges of a Roman camp, and several tumuli covered with trees.

CLAXBY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, N. division of the wapentake of WALSHCROFT, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. E.) from Market-Rasen; containing 220 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1679 acres: coal is supposed to exist, but no attempt has been made to work it; there are quarries of stone of good quality for road-making, and great quantities are raised for the supply of the surrounding neighbourhood. A pleasure fair is held about the end of August or beginning of September. The living is a discharged rectory, to which the rectory of Normanby-on-the-Wolds was united in 1740, valued in the king's books at £8. 10. 10.; net income, £844; patrons, Executors of the late Richard Atkinson, Esq. The church is in the early English style, and contains some ancient monuments. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Several Roman coins, one of the reign of Constantine, and some Roman pavements, have been discovered.

CLAXBY-PLUCKACRE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of HORNCastle, hundred of HILL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Horncastle; containing 29 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Horncastle to Boston, and comprises by computation 900 acres, chiefly arable, with a light sandy soil, adapted to barley and oats, which form the chief produce. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 10. 10., and in the gift of Sir Henry Dymoke, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £140. The church fell down some years since, and has not been rebuilt: the inhabitants have sittings in Moorby church by consent of the rector and parishioners, and an annual payment of £5 is made to the minister of Moorby as officiating minister to Claxby.

CLAXTON, a township, in the parish of GREATHAM, union of STOCKTON-UPON-TEES, N. E. division of STOCKTON ward; S. division of the county of DURHAM, 7 miles (N. N. E.) from Stockton; containing 52 inhabitants. A branch of the Norman family of Heriz settled here, and assumed the local name, and numerous notices of the Claxtons occur in the records during the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries: from this family Thomas Claxton, a celebrated antiquary, and the friend and correspondent of Camden, was descended. Of the ancient manor-house, which was deserted for Horden, no traces exist. The township comprises 866 acres.

CLAXTON, or LONG CLAWSON (St. REMIGIUS), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (N. N. W.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 838 inhabitants. It is situated in the vale of Belvoir; and comprises by admeasurement 2800 acres: the canal navigation from Nottingham to Grantham runs from west to east, through the lower part of the manor. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 10. 2.; net income, £105; patron, Lord Godolphin: 126 acres of land belong to the vicarage, and there is a glebe-house, with an acre of glebe. The Baptists and Wesleyans have places of worship. Here are two free schools, towards the endowment of which Anthony Wadd gave land, in 1758; the rent of which is now £62. 8.; in 1772, Mrs. Briggs bequeathed £100, for the same purpose.

CLAXTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of LODDON and CLAVERING, hundred of LODDON, E. division of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Loddon; containing 200 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 920 acres. A charter for a market on Monday, and a fair on the eve of the festival of St. John the Baptist, to continue four days, was granted in the reign of Edward III., to the Kerdiston family, but both have long been discontinued. The living is a vicarage, endowed with a small portion of the rectorial tithes; net income, £60; patron, Sir Charles Rich, Bart.: the glebe contains about 24 acres. The church, which consists of a nave and chancel, with a square tower, is partly in the early and partly in the decorated style, and appears, by some arches now filled up, to have had formerly a north aisle. There is a place of worship for Baptists: Extensive ruins still remain of the seat of the Kerdiston family, whose manor-house Edward III. permitted to be converted into a castle.

CLAXTON, a chapelry, in the parish of BOSSALL, union of YORK, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK, 8½ miles (N. E. by E.) from York; containing 168 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 813 acres of land: the village is situated about a mile to the east of the road between York and Malton. The petty-sessions for the division are held at Lobster House. The chapel is a small edifice. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists; and a school, built by subscription in 1824, is supported by James Walker, Esq., J.P., of Sand-Hutton Hall.

CLAYBROOKE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of LUTTERWORTH, comprising the townships of Great and Little Claybrooke, the chapelry of Wigston Parva, the hamlet of Ullesthorpe, and the liberty of Bittesby, in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER; and the chapelry of Wibtoft, in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK; the whole containing 1417 inhabitants, of whom 519 are in the township of Great Claybrooke, 4¾ miles (N. W. by W.) from Lutterworth. The parish is situated on the road from London to Hinckley and Atherstone; the surface is pleasingly undulated, and the soil is in some few places sandy, but in general a rich loam. A part of the population is employed in the stocking manufacture, which is carried on to a considerable extent. The Midland Counties' railway passes through the parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £30. 10. 5.; and in the patronage of the Crown; improPRIATORS, Earl of Denbigh and Trinity College, Cambridge; net income, £451. The church is at Little Claybrooke, and is partly in the decorated and partly in the later English style. There are chapels of ease at Wibtoft and Little Wigston. A school was endowed by Mark Smith with £26 per annum, and is otherwise maintained by an annual sum of £9, left by Alderman Newton; and J. E. Dicey, Esq., of Claybrooke Hall, has erected a school for females, which he supports. This was the Roman station Benonæ, or Vennonæ; and at a place termed High Cross, two miles westward, two great Roman roads intersect, which traversed the kingdom obliquely.

CLAYBROOKE, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of CLAYBROOKE, union of LUTTERWORTH, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Lutterworth; containing 104 inhabitants.

CLAYCOATON.—See COATON-CLAY.

CLAYDON, a chapelry, in the parish of CROPREDY, union and hundred of BANBURY, county of OXFORD, 6½ miles (N.) from Banbury; containing 337 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. James. The village is situated in the northern extremity of the county: a small spring which rises in it has the peculiarity of emitting the largest quantity of water in the driest weather. Here are found the pyrites aureus, or golden firestone; also the asteria, or star-stone, called by Gesner sigillum stelle, from its use in sealing: in splitting some of these, the figure of a rose is plainly discernible.

CLAYDON (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3½ miles (N. N. W.) from Ipswich; containing 418 inhabitants. The Stow-Market and Ipswich navigation crosses the parish. The living is a rectory, with that of Akenham united, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of Miss Drury: the tithes of the two parishes have been commuted for £510, and there are 31 acres of glebe in Claydon, and 20 in Akenham. The church stands on a very high site, commanding an extensive prospect: the parsonage-house and grounds, which adjoin the churchyard, are very neatly arranged, and ornamented with fine timber. There are schools in union with the National Society.

CLAYDON, EAST (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of WINSLOW, hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2¾ miles (S. W. by W.) from Winslow; containing 378 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Steeple-Claydon, and valued in the king's books at £7. 17. The church was demolished during the parliamentary-war, by Cornelius Holland, one of the judges who sat upon the trial of Charles I. An infants' school is supported by subscription.

CLAYDON, MIDDLE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the hundred of ASHENDON, union and county of BUCKINGHAM, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Winslow; containing 127 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15; net income, £540; patron, Sir Harry Verney. The church contains a monument to the memory of Sir Edmund Verney, standard-bearer to Charles I., who was killed at the battle of Edge-Hill, in 1642; and a monument, by Chantrey, to Gen. Sir Harry Calvert, adjutant-general of the British army, and father of Sir Harry Verney, the present baronet. A school is chiefly supported by Sir H. Verney; and almshouses for six widows were built in 1694, by Sir Ralph Verney, who endowed them with a rent-charge of £15. 12.

CLAYDON, STEEPLE (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union, hundred, and county of BUCKINGHAM, 5½ miles (W.) from Winslow; containing 649 inhabitants. At the period of the Conquest, this was the most populous place in the hundred; in an adjoining wood, an earthen vessel filled with coins of Carausius and Alectus, has been discovered. The living is a vicarage, with that of East Claydon annexed, valued in the king's books at £13. 3. 9.; net income, £300; patron, Sir Harry Verney, Bart. The tithes were commuted for land and a corn-rent, in 1795. Thomas Chaloner, Esq., in 1656, built a school-house, and endowed it with £12 per annum; but the gift has long been lost.

CLAYHANGER (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of TIVERTON, hundred of BAMPTON, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 4¾ miles (E. by N.) from Bampton; containing 294 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the new road from Wiveliscombe to Barnstaple, comprises by measurement 2082 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 7. 3½.; net income, £273; patron, Rev. W. M. Harrison. The church contains a rood-loft and an ancient oak screen elaborately carved; it formerly belonged to the Knights Templars, who had a preceptory here. There is a place of worship for dissenters; and a school, founded in 1747, has a small endowment.

CLAYHEDON (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of WELLINGTON, hundred of HEMYOCK, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (S. S. E.) from Wellington; containing 849 inhabitants, and comprising 5089a. 2r. 35p. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £38. 5.; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. Clarke, whose tithes have been commuted for £600, and whose glebe consists of 110 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a neat plain edifice. A school was endowed with £110, by Mary Waldron, in 1749; and a national school is partly supported by the rector.

CLAY-LANE, a township, in the parish of NORTH WINGFIELD, union of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, 5½ miles (S.) from Chesterfield; containing 1478 inhabitants. A school is endowed with £15. 15. per annum, accruing from land.

CLAYPOLE (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (S. E.) from Newark; containing 663 inhabitants. It is intersected by the river Witham. A small portion of the population is employed in weaving yarn. Oliver Cromwell is supposed to have slept at this place on the night previous to the siege of Newark, in an ancient house near the river, which still remains. The living is a rectory in mediocrities; the north mediocrities is valued in the king's books at £16. 8. 4., and the south at £15. 15.; net income of the north, £389, and of the south, £348; patron, J. P. Plumtre, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land, in 1769. The church is an ancient structure, in the early and decorated-English styles, with a square embattled tower, surmounted by a beautiful spire. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and two schools are partly supported by the Heron family.

CLAYTHORPE, a chapelry, in the parish of BELLEAU, union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Alford; containing 69 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £165. There is a national school.

CLAYTHORPE, a hamlet, in the township and parish of BURTON-IN-KENDAL, LONSDALE ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 1 mile (N. E. by N.) from Burton-in-Kendal. About a mile from the village is Farlon Knot, a huge limestone mountain, resembling in form the rock of Gibraltar. On the edge of another mountain is a natural curiosity, called Claythorpe Clints, consisting of a limestone rock, forming an inclined plain to the horizon, deeply rent in many places by the supposed ebbing of a great body of water, or the retiring of the ocean, by which it is conjectured that this, with some other plains in the neighbourhood, was once covered.

CLAYTON, a township, in the parish and union of STOKE-UPON-TRENT, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Newcastle; containing 155 inhabitants.

CLAYTON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of CUCKFIELD, hundred of BUTTINGHILL, rape of LEWES, E. division of SUSSEX, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Hurst-Pierpoint; containing 747 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Brighton to London, by way of Cuckfield, and intersected by the London and Brighton railway, which proceeds for about a mile and a quarter under Clayton Hill, through a tunnel that commences near the church. The southern portion of the parish is fine down, and the northern comprises some rich arable, pasture, and woodland; the scenery is pleasing, and the views from Clayton Hill are extensive and interesting. Fairs are held on St. John's Common for cattle and sheep, on the 6th of July, and the 26th of September. The living is a rectory, with that of Keymer annexed, valued in the king's books at £21. 0. 10., and in the patronage of Brasenose College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £400, and the glebe comprises 25 acres; certain inappropriate tithes have also been commuted for £39. The church is of the early English style, with some Norman details, of which the principal is a fine arch separating the chancel from the nave; it was repaired and beautified in 1838. A school is supported by subscription. The Roman road from Portus Adriani passed over Clayton Hill to St. John's Common, and on opening a barrow near Clayton windmill, in 1805, the remains of a camp kitchen were found, in which was a vessel of embaked clay, containing bones of various animals. In the rectory grounds, some years since, a Roman bath was discovered by the plough, with a beautifully tessellated pavement; celts and various Druidical relics have been found near Layton Mill, and numerous fossils in the chalk-pits.

CLAYTON, a township, in the parish and union of BRADFORD, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Bradford; containing 4347 inhabitants. This place, which is noticed in the Domesday survey, where it is written Claitons, as part of the manor of Bolton, comprises by computation 1600 acres, of which about 150 are arable, and the remainder high land, affording tolerable pasture, with four or five acres of wood. It contains the straggling villages of Clayton and Clayton-Heights, situated on the acclivities, and part of Queen's-Head, on the summit, of a bold eminence; and the population is chiefly employed in the manufacture of worsted goods, and in hand-loom weaving. There are seven quarries of slate and flagstone, of which two are worked underground; the stone is of excellent quality, and is brought up through a shaft in the same manner as coal; and in the upper part of the township, called the Mountain, is a valuable coal-mine, at present wrought. The Leeds and Halifax old road passes through the place. A lecture-room has been fitted up by the members of the Establishment, until a church can be obtained. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans.

CLAYTON (ALL SAINTS), with FRICKLEY, a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 9 miles (E. by N.) from Barnsley; containing 316 inhabitants. The prioress of Hampole anciently had some land here; and the manor perhaps belonged at one period to St. Sepulchre's chapel, York. There was formerly a chapel, which was in use in the 17th century, when the Parliamentary Commissioners reported that it was served by the minister of Frickley, without any revenue, and that, as the chief part of the parishioners lived at Clayton, it would be expedient to make that place the ecclesiastical head, and Frickley subordinate. The village, which is usually called Clayton-in-the-Clay, is pleasant, and is situated nearly a mile to the west of the church. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Frickley: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an inclosure act, in 1814.

CLAYTON-GRIFFITH, a township, in the parish of TRENTHAM, union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD; containing 56 inhabitants.

CLAYTON-LE-DALE, a township, in the parish, union, and Lower division of the hundred, of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Blackburn; containing 511 inhabitants.

CLAYTON-LE-MOORS, a township, in the parish of WHALLEY, union, and Lower division of the hundred, of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Blackburn; containing 2602 inhabitants. A district church has been recently built. Three schools are supported by subscription, and at Enfield is a Roman Catholic chapel.

CLAYTON-LE-WOODS, a township, in the parish and hundred of LEYLAND, union of CHORLEY, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Chorley; containing 795 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £182, of which £100 are payable to the impropiator, and £82 to the vicar of the parish. There is a school, with an endowment of £9. 6. 2. per annum.

CLAYTON, WEST, a township, in the parish of HIGH HOYLAND, wapentake of STAINCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 9 miles (S. E. by E.) from Huddersfield; containing 1440 inhabitants. The township is situated on the Wakefield and Denby-Dale road, and comprises by computation 1080 acres, belonging to various proprietors, under the Earl of Scarborough, who is lord of the manor: several coal-mines are in operation. The manufacture of fancy silk and worsted goods, for waistcoats, trowsers, and ladies' dresses, is carried on to a considerable extent, and large mills have been erected for these branches of industry, in which the greater part of the population is employed: there is an extensive worsted spinning-mill, belonging to Messrs. Wood and Walker; and clogs are also manufactured. The village is situated on a declivity, and the surrounding scenery is pleasingly diversified. There are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, Wesleyans, and Methodists of the New Connexion; and some trifling benefactions are distributed among the poor.

CLAYWORTH (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of EAST RETFORD, North-Clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from East Retford; containing 627 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the west by the river Idle, and intersected by the Chesterfield canal, comprises the townships of Clayworth and Wiseton, the former containing 2076, and the latter 930, acres of fertile land, the soil of Clayworth being a rich clay, and that of Wiseton, a fine red sandy mould. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 10. 10.; net income, £604, with a house; patron, Dean of Lincoln. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £3. 5. only, the greater part of the parish being tithe-free under an inclosure act, passed at the close of the last century, when 281 acres were allotted to the incumbent, now called Clayworth-high-field, or the Tithe-farm. The church contains many ancient monumental inscriptions. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The Rev. William Sampson, in 1700, bequeathed land, producing £57 per annum, as an endowment for a school.

CLEADON, a township, in the parish of WHITBURN, union of SOUTH SHIELDS, E. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Sunderland; containing 257 inhabitants. Cleadon, or, as anciently written, Clivedon, Tower, which was taken down at the close of the last century, is mentioned so early as 1587, and was a square building of two stages, leaded, and with a spiral stone staircase to the top; it was attached to the east end of the present old mansion, and commanded a very extensive prospect. Limestone is obtained; and near Marston rock is found a species of indurated marl, in thin laminae, very pliant, and hence termed flexible limestone. A small school on the national plan has been established.

CLEARWELL, a chapelry, in the parish of NEWLAND, union of MONMOUTH, hundred of St. BRIAVELL'S, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 7 miles (W. by N.) from Blakeney; containing 674 inhabitants. A considerable number of persons belonging to Clearwell are employed in the coal and iron-mines in the parish, and in the adjacent forest of Dean. A church has been built and endowed, containing 460 sittings, 380 of which are free, the Incorporated Society having, in 1829, granted £400 towards defraying the expense. There is a curious stone cross.

CLEASBY, a parish, in the union of DARLINGTON, wapentake of GILLING-EAST, N. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Darlington; containing 164 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the north by the river Tees, and comprises by computation 839 acres, mostly arable land; the surface is generally flat, but with a singular and very high embankment, which runs through the parish on the south side; the scenery is pleasing and picturesque. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £188; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Ripon. The ancient church, a small and inferior structure, rebuilt, with the parsonage-house, by Dr. John Robinson, a native of the parish, a distinguished plenipotentiary, and Bishop of London, was replaced, in 1828, by an edifice in a superior style of architecture, containing a curious monument to the prelate. Dr. Robinson also founded a school, in 1723, and endowed it with 16 acres of grass land, of the annual value of £22, free for six boys; and Mrs. Cornwallis, a step-daughter of the bishop, left, in 1785, funds, now producing £10. 15. 2., for the relief of poor housekeepers.

CLEATHAM, a township, in the parish of MANTON, union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, wapentake of CORRINGHAM, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (S. W.) from Glandford-Brigg; containing 99 inhabitants. It comprises about 1087 acres, of which the soil is light and sandy.

CLEATLAM, a township, partly in the parish of STAINDROP, partly in that of GAINFORD, and partly (a small portion only) in that of WINSTONE, union of TEESDALE, S. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 2 miles (S. S. W.) from Staindrop; containing 95 inhabitants. The township comprises 1098*a*. 1*r*. 28*p*., of which 612 acres are arable, 451 meadow and pasture, and 34 woodland; the soil is mostly a strong clay, and the surface chiefly elevated ground, commanding extensive views of the surrounding country, including the castles and parks of Raby and Streatlam, and in the distance the Cleveland hills: freestone is quarried for building purposes. In the centre of the village is an ancient cross. The tithes have been commuted for £152. 12. 8., of which £131. 12. 8. are payable to the rector of Winstone, and £21 to the vicar of Gainford: the Duke of Cleveland is impropiator of the tithes payable from the lands situate in the parish of Staindrop.

CLEATOR (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of WHITEHAVEN, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Whitehaven; containing 763 inhabitants. The manor-house was burnt about 1315, by a party of Scots under James Douglas. The parish comprises 2693*a*. 1*r*. 38*p*., of which about 1162 acres are arable, 32 wood, and 1500 inclosed common. Coal, limestone, and iron-ore are wrought, and a great quantity of lime is burnt and sent to Scotland: here are also forges for the manufacture of spades and other edge-tools, besides an extensive establishment for spinning hemp and tow, making sewing-thread, &c. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £77; patron and impropiator, T. R. G. Braddyll, Esq. The church was rebuilt in 1841, when 272 sittings were added, of which 243 are free, the Incorporated Society having granted £250 in aid of the expense. A Roman causeway formerly passed through the parish, from Egremont to Papcastle, near Cocker-mouth, but few traces of it are apparent.

CLECKHEATON, a township, in the parish of BIRSTAL, union of BRADFORD, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 9 miles (W.) from Leeds; containing 4299 inhabitants. This township, which is situated in a rich and fertile vale, includes the hamlets of Oakenshaw and Scholes, and comprises by admeasurement 1686 acres; Miss Currer is lady of the manor. Several coal-mines of excellent quality are in operation, and a quarry of freestone of inferior kind is worked. From its favourable situation on the Leeds and Elland, Leeds and Halifax, and Bradford and Dewsbury roads, the place is well adapted for the woollen and worsted manufactures, which, together with the making of cards and machinery used in the woollen trade, are carried on to a great extent; the chief establishments being the worsted-mills of Messrs. Anderton and Sons, and Messrs. Atkinson and Son: there are also two iron-foundries. Vast quantities of cloth for the army are made. The village is situated on the slope of a hill commanding a fine view of the vale, of which the acclivities are richly wooded, and of the surrounding country, which abounds with picturesque scenery; it is neatly built, and well lighted with gas, from works established, in 1837, at an expense of £4000, by a proprietary of £10 shareholders; a news-room is supported by subscription, and a mechanics' institution was established in 1838. Considerable improvements have recently taken place in the village, and numerous villas have been erected in the immediate vicinity. Fairs for cattle, which are well attended, are held on the first Thursday in April, and on the last Thursday in August.

The chapel, called the White chapel, about a mile from the village, was rebuilt, about a century since, by Dr. Richardson, of Bierley, and again, on a larger scale, in 1821; it is a neat edifice, in the early English style, and contains 800 sittings, of which 186 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Miss Currer; net income, £150. A district church, dedicated to St. John, was erected, on a site given by the late Mrs. Beaumont, of Bretton Hall, by a grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners, at an expense of £2700, and consecrated in 1832; it is in the early English style, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles, and contains 500 sittings, of which 60 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Birstal; net income, £150, with a glebe-house. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. A national school was erected, in 1834, at an expense of £600, and a British and an infants' school, with a house for the master, were erected on a site given by A. Dixon, Esq., in 1835, at an expense of £900. There were formerly some remains of a Roman camp, which have long been obliterated by the plough, and many coins, chiefly of the Lower Empire, have been found on the site. Several coins were also discovered in earthen jars near Scot Lane, in 1818 and 1830.

CLEE (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the parliamentary borough of GRIMSBY, union of CAISTOR, wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 2 miles (S.E. by E.) from Grimsby; containing, with the township of Cleethorpe, and the hamlets of Thrunscoc and Weelsby, 1002 inhabitants, of whom 778 are in Cleethorpe. The parish is bounded by the river Humber on the north and east, and comprises by computation 3400 acres, of which the surface is rather flat, excepting towards the sea, where there is a considerable elevation, commanding a fine view of the Yorkshire coast and German Ocean. An act for inclosing land was passed in 1840. In the parish are many of the fountains called Blow Wells, which are deep circular pits, supplying a continual flow of water. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £93; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Lincoln: there is about an acre of glebe. The church has some fine Norman piers and arches, and an ancient circular font: an inscription on one of the pillars in the south aisle contains a memorial of the dedication of the church to the Holy Trinity in the reign of Richard the First, 1192. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a national school, supported by subscription; and boys between the ages of seven and fourteen are eligible to the grammar school in the neighbouring parish of Humberston.

CLEE (ST. MARGARET'S), a parish, in the union of LUDLOW, hundred of MUNSLOW, S. division of SALOP, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Ludlow; containing 269 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £2. 8. 4.; net income, £172; patrons, Representatives of J. C. Pelham, Esq. There is a place of worship for Roman Catholics at Clee Hills.

CLEER, ST., a parish, in the union of LISKEARD, hundred of WEST, E. division of CORNWALL, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Liskeard; containing 1412 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 4000 acres, the chief part of which is uninclosed common and coppice, with some oak woods; the soil in general is light, with the exception of some boggy peat soil: there is a great quantity of granite, locally termed moor-stone, and porphyry; and a copper-mine has recently been opened. The river Fowey runs through the parish, and several rivulets empty themselves near Looe. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £19. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown; impropiator, E. P. Bastard, Esq.: the great tithes have been commuted for £330, and the vicarial for £330; the impropriate glebe contains 2 acres; there is a good glebe-house. The church is a handsome and spacious structure, in the early English style. A school is partly supported by subscription. There are a few chalybeate springs in the parish; also an ancient Druidical monument, called the Hurlers, consisting of rude upright stones arranged in three circles, their centres in a right line, and the middle circle the largest.

CLEETHORPE, a township, in the parish of CLEE, union of CAISTOR, wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (E. S.E.) from Great Grimsby; containing 803 inhabitants. This place, which comprises the hamlets of Far and Near Cleethorpe, contains about 700 acres of land, and is pleasantly situated on the south shore of the Humber, near the confluence of that river with the German Ocean. It is much resorted to as a bathing-place, for which it is highly eligible; the air is pure, and the scenery good; and for the accommodation of visitors, there is, besides a few lodging-houses and smaller inns, a large hotel, built some years since, on an eminence, embracing extensive views of the sea, the Humber, and the Yorkshire coast. Many of the population are employed in the oyster fisheries. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is supported by subscription.

CLEEVE, BISHOP'S (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WINCHCOMB, forming the hundred of CLEEVE, or BISHOP'S-CLEEVE, in the E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; comprising the township of Bishop's-Cleeve, and the hamlets of Gotherington, Stoke-Orchard, Southam with Brockhampton, and Woodman-cote; and containing 1944 inhabitants, of whom 682 are in the township of Bishop's-Cleeve, 3 miles (N. by E.)

from Cheltenham. This parish derives its name Clive or Cleeve from the Saxon Cliv, "a steep ascent," and its adjunct, distinguishing it from Prior-Cleeve, from its having been the property of the Bishops of Worcester, whose ancient palace is now the rectory-house: it comprises 8746*a.* 1*r.* 2*p.*, of which more than 1000 acres are common. The village is seated on an eminence, on the road from Cheltenham to Evesham; and races are annually held on Cleeve Cloud Hill. The Birmingham and Gloucester railway crosses the common. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £84. 6. 8.; patron and incumbent, Rev. W. L. Townsend, D.D.: the rectorial tithes have been commuted for £1278, and the impropriate for £107. 6., and there are 181 acres of rectorial glebe. The church is a curious and spacious structure, principally of Norman architecture, with a noble arch of exquisite workmanship in that style over the western entrance: the spire fell down in 1696, and caused considerable dilapidation, but, in 1700, it was replaced by the tower that now rises from the centre of the building, which underwent a thorough repair at the same time. There is a chapel of ease at Stoke-Orchard. On the ridge of Cleeve Cloud Hill is a large double intrenchment, called the Camps, in the form of a crescent, 350 yards in length, but accessible only in front. Within the limits of the parish are some springs, the water of which is strongly saline.

CLEEVE, CHAPEL, a hamlet, in the parish of OLD CLEEVE, union of WILLITON, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, W. division of SOMERSET, 3¼ miles (E.) from Dunster. The chapel, which gave to this place its distinguishing appellation, was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, but has long since fallen to ruin; it stood on a rock, and was the resort of numerous pilgrims.

CLEEVE, OLD (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of WILLITON, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, W. division of SOMERSET, 18 miles (N. W.) from Taunton; containing 1351 inhabitants. The parish adjoins the Bristol Channel, and is remarkable for its craggy rocks, which abound with alabaster; it comprises by measurement 4700 acres, whereof about 2900 are arable, 1500 meadow, pasture, and orchard, 200 woodland, and 100 uninclosed. On the beach a great quantity of kelp is gathered and burnt, previously to being sold in the market at Bristol. Lodging-houses have been erected for the accommodation of persons resorting hither for the benefit of sea-bathing. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £7; patron and incumbent, Rev. W. Newton, whose tithes have been commuted for £600, and whose glebe comprises 3¼ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A Cistercian abbey, in honour of the Virgin Mary, was founded here, in 1188, by William de Romara, the revenue of which, in 1534, was valued at £155. 9. 4½: there are still some remains, part having been converted into a private mansion, called Cleeve Abbey.

CLEEVE, PRIOR (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of EVESHAM, Upper division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, locally in the Upper division of that of BLACKENHURST, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 5½ miles (N. E.) from Evesham; containing 366 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the navigable river Avon, which here receives the waters of the Arrow, on its first entering the county; it comprises 1454*a.* 3*r.* 17*p.*, and the soil is a rich clayey loam, resting upon blue limestone. There are quarries of lias and blue limestone, which are wrought for building, slabs for hearth-stones and various other purposes, and a species of marble susceptible of a high polish, and resembling that of Derbyshire. The village is beautifully situated on an eminence, rising from the southern bank of the Avon; the grounds immediately around it are flat, and the meadows occasionally subject to floods. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £156; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Worcester: the tithes were commuted for land in 1775. The church is an ancient structure, in the early English style, with a handsome square embattled tower. In working the quarries, in 1812, two earthen jars were discovered at a depth of three feet from the surface, having Roman coins in a state of good preservation; one jar contained gold and the other silver coins, of the reigns of Gratian, Valentinian, and Theodosius.

CLEHONGER (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the hundred of WEBTREE, union and county of HEREFORD, 3½ miles (W. S. W.) from Hereford; containing 396 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the right bank of the river Wye, which bounds it on the north; it is intersected by the road from Hereford to Hay, and consists of 1888 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 4. 2., and in the gift of the Dean of Hereford: the appropriate tithes have been commuted for £180, and the vicarial for £164. 15., and the glebe consists of ½ an acre.

CLEMENT'S (ST.), a parish, in the union of TRURO, W. division of the hundred of POWDER and of the county of CORNWALL; containing 3436 inhabitants. This parish, of which a very considerable, and by far the most populous, portion adjoins the town of Truro, comprises by computation 3200 acres; the surface is hilly, but of moderate elevation, and the soil is generally fertile, more especially in those parts bordering on the town, where some of the meadow land is let at £12 per acre. The grounds are watered by two small rivulets, the one called the Tresillian river, which falls into an arm of the sea at the north-east extremity of the parish, and the other called the Alleyn, which flows by Truro, and bounds the parish on the south-west. Polwhele, anciently a castle of some strength, and subsequently the family seat of the ancestors of the historian of the county of Cornwall, was the temporary residence of Charles I., who, for a short time, took refuge here after his defeat in 1646; it has been much improved, and is now occupied by Major Polwhele. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Cornwall; net income, £243; impropriators, H. P. Andrew, Esq., and Heirs of Mr. Vivian. The church, a plain neat structure, with a tower, contains a handsome monument to Samuel Thomas, Esq., one of the last and best works of the eminent artist Bacon, and a monument of white marble, executed in Italy, and inscribed by Admiral Lord Exmouth, to the memory of Rear-Admiral Reynolds, who was shipwrecked on board the St. George of 98 guns, off the coast of Jutland, on the 24th of December, 1811. There are some mineral springs in the parish.

CLEMENT'S (ST.), a parish, in the union of HEAD-INGTON, hundred of BULLINGDON, county of OXFORD; containing 1769 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the west by the Cherwell, over which is a neat stone bridge leading into the city of Oxford. Near the bridge, baths on an extensive scale have been constructed. The living is a rectory not in charge, in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £120. From the inadequate accommodation which the old church afforded, a new building, in the Norman style, has been erected by subscription, on ground given by Sir Joseph Lock; it is situated near the margin of the Cherwell, and, as seen from Magdalene bridge, forms an interesting feature in the vale. Stone's hospital, for poor persons, was founded pursuant to the will of the Rev. William Stone, Principal of New Inn Hall, dated May 12th, 1685, for eight women; and Boulter's almshouses were established, agreeably to the will of Cutler Boulter, dated March 21st, 1736, for eight single men. Various lands and tenements, producing at present about £14 per annum, but capable, on the expiration of the present leases, of increase to the amount of £300 per annum, have been left, in equal moieties, for the benefit of the poor, and for repairing the church. Adjoining the parish, but on extra-parochial ground, is the hospital of St. Bartholomew, founded by Henry I., in 1126, for infirm lepers, and which, having suffered considerable impoverishment, was granted by Edward III. to Oriel College, on condition that the society should maintain a chaplain and eight almsmen in perpetuity. About the time of the siege of Oxford, the house was demolished, and rebuilt by the society, in 1649; the remains are now appropriated to stabling and cow-houses. Here were preserved relics of various saints, the supposed efficacy of which, in performing miraculous cures, attracted numerous pilgrims. On the demesne lands of Mr. Morrell, a skeleton of a gigantic horse was discovered, in 1821, completely caparisoned in the Roman costume, near the Roman road which passes through the grounds.

CLENCHWARTON (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of WISBECH, hundred of FREBRIDGE-MARSHLAND, W. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (W.) from Lynn; containing 597 inhabitants. At the time of the Norman survey this place was called Ecleuartuana, signifying a watery situation by a river. The parish comprises by admeasurement about 2880 acres, two-thirds of which are arable; 160 acres consist of the old bed of the river Ouse, formed into pasture ground; salt-marshes extend to the wash between Terrington and North Lynn. About 1100 acres are titheable only to West and North Lynn. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Mrs. Goldfrap; net income, £337: the glebe contains 32 acres. The church is in the later English style, with a square embattled tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CLENELL, a township, in the parish of ALLENTON, union of ROTHBURY, W. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 10¼ miles (W. N. W.) from Rothbury; containing 18 inhabitants. This place was the seat and manor of the ancient family of Clenell, and in the 18th of Edward I. was possessed by Thomas Clennell, who in that year obtained a grant of free warren. Luke Clennell, Esq., who resided here, was high sheriff of the county in 1727; and William Wilkinson, Esq., who came to the property by marriage, filled the same office in 1758. The township is now possessed by Anthony Wilkinson, Esq., of Coxhoe, Durham. It consists entirely of steep porphyritic hills, covered with short grass, and occupied as sheep-walks, and is situated on the east side of the Alwine, one mile north from Alwinton.

CLENT (ST. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of BROMSGROVE, S. division of the hundred of SEISDON, and of the county of STAFFORD, though locally in the Lower division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, Stourbridge and E. divisions of the county of Worcester, 4 miles (S. S. E.) from Stourbridge; containing 918 inhabitants. It comprises 2365a. 2r. 33p., of which about 1414 acres are arable, 565 pasture, 57 woodland, and 255 commons. The living is a vicarage, with that of Rowley-Regis annexed, valued in the king's books at £8. 16. 5½., and in the patronage of the Crown; improPRIATOR, J. Amphlett, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £340, and the vicarial for £312. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. A free school was founded by John Amphlett, Esq., in 1704; and a Sunday school was established by Thomas Waldron, Esq., who, at his death, in 1800, bequeathed £500 for its support. The infant king of Mercia, St. Kenelm, is supposed by some to have been murdered here, in 819, by order of his sister Quendrida, but the body, having been subsequently discovered, was buried in Winchcomb Abbey, which had been founded by his father; others think that he was slain accidentally.

CLEOBURY-MORTIMER (ST. MARY), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of STOTTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, 32 miles (S. S. E.) from Shrewsbury, and 137 (N. W.) from London, on the road to Ludlow; containing 1730 inhabitants. The name of this place is derived from its situation in a district abounding with clay, and from the Saxon word byrig, a town; the adjunct, by which it is distinguished from North Cleobury, in the same county, is taken from its ancient possessor, Ralph de Mortimer, who held it at the time of the general survey. Hugh de Mortimer, his son, built a castle here, but, having revolted in favour of the heir of Stephen, he fortified it against Henry II., who, with a powerful army, besieged and entirely demolished it. During the war between Henry III. and the barons, Cleobury suffered greatly from the incursions of the Welsh, who at that time made frequent irruptions into this part of the country. The town is situated on an eminence rising gradually from the western bank of the river Rea, over which is a neat stone bridge, and consists principally of one long street, containing many good houses, and the mutilated remains of an old cross; the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with excellent water from a spring that has its source in the Brown Clee hills, and falls into a spacious basin in the lower part of the town. From its retired situation, in a district almost inaccessible, in consequence of the badness of the roads, the trade is rapidly declining; formerly there were some important iron-works, but there are now only two forges. A few of the inhabitants are employed in the manufacture of paper, for which there are two mills. On the Clee hills, about three miles west of the town, are large collieries, producing excellent coal; and on the higher part of them is a remarkably fine, though not extensive, vein of cannel coal, of which many beautiful specimens have been worked into snuff-boxes and ornaments of various kinds. Common stone is also quarried. The market, granted to Sir Francis Lacon, in 1614, is held on Wednesday; the fairs are on April 21st, Trinity-Monday, and October 27th.

The parish comprises about 6000 or 7000 acres. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13; net income, £448; patron, William Lacon Childe, Esq.; impropiators, Earl of Craven, William L. Childe, Esq., and others, with the exception of the corn-tithes of a small part of the parish, which belong to the lay deacon. The church is an ancient structure, with a plain square tower, surmounted by an octagonal spire of wood, considerably curved from the perpendicular. There are two places of worship for Wesleyans; and a Roman Catholic chapel is attached to Mawley Hall, the mansion of Sir Edward Blount, Bart., within a mile of the town. The free school was founded pursuant to the will of Sir Lacon William Childe, Knt., dated in 1714, whereby he bequeathed the residue of his personal estate, after the death of his lady, for its endowment: the income is about £500, including the interest of £1000 given by Mr. John Winwood, in 1810. An infants' school is endowed with £15 per annum. The poor law union, of which the town is the head, comprises 17 parishes or places, namely, 13 in the county of Salop, 3 in that of Worcester, and 1 in that of Hereford; and contains a population of 8708. To the east of the free school are the remains of a Danish encampment; and within the distance of a mile and a half were the three castles of Cleobury, Toot, and Walltown, of which there is not a single vestige. An old farm-house here is said to have been the first settlement of the Augustine friars. Robert Langford, author of the Visions of Pierce Plowman, a satirical poem on the clergy of the fourteenth century, was a native of the town.

CLEOBURY, NORTH (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of BRIDGENORTH, hundred of STOTTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, 1 mile (N. by E.) from Burwarton; containing 176 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 1145 acres, exclusive of about 430 of uninclosed land, forming part of the Brown Clee hill, once a forest, and which is the highest hill in the county, rising to an elevation of 1805 feet. Coal-mines are worked, but are supposed to be nearly exhausted; and good stone is quarried for buildings. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 12. 3½, and in the gift of Henry George Mytton, Esq.: the glebe comprises 75 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church was enlarged and thoroughly repaired in 1834. Upon the summit of the Brown Clee hill are the remains of an encampment, partly in the parish of North Cleobury, supposed to be a work of the Britons, when besieged by the Roman army; and on the Burfs, which is the highest peak of the hill, and between a mile and a mile and a half distant from the village, is a poetical inscription, celebrating the independence, valour, and love of liberty of the ancient Britons, written by the Rev. Thomas Warter, a man of great literary attainments, and many years rector of this parish.

CLERKENWELL, an extensive parish, in the Finsbury division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, separated from the city of London on the south by the intervening parish of St. Sepulchre, and on the west by the liberties of Saffron-Hill and Ely-Rents; and containing, with the chapelry of Pentonville, 56,756 inhabitants. This place derives its name from an ancient well, round which the clerks, or inferior clergy, of London, were in the habit of assembling at certain periods, for the performance of sacred dramas, as noticed in the reign of Henry II. by Fitz-Stephen, under the appellation of Fons Clericorum; and the site appears to have been well adapted to the purpose, being in the centre of gently rising grounds, that formed an extensive natural amphitheatre, for the accommodation of the numerous spectators who attended. The most celebrated of these festivals occurred in 1391, in the reign of Richard II., and continued for three days, during which several sacred dramas were performed by the clerks, in presence of the king and queen, attended by the whole court. Soon after the year 1100, Jordan Briset and Muriel, his wife, founded a priory here for nuns of the Benedictine order, dedicated to St. Mary, the site of which is now occupied by St. James' church: the revenue, at the Dissolution, was £282. 16. 5. The same Jordan and his wife founded also an hospital for the Knights Hospitallers of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, which was munificently endowed with lands, and invested with many privileges by several successive monarchs; the lord prior had precedence of all lay barons in parliament, and power over all commanderies and smaller establishments of that order in the kingdom; the revenue, at the Dissolution, was £2385. 12. 8. The institution was partly restored in the reign of Philip and Mary, but was suppressed in that of Elizabeth. The remains are, the gate, in the later English style, the greater part of which is now occupied as a tavern; and the vaults of the old church, which were cleared out a few years since, when a beautiful crypt in the Norman style was discovered. St. John's church was subsequently built upon this site. The establishment of these monasteries naturally drew around them some dependent dwellings, but the parish made little progress in the number of its inhabitants prior to the time of Elizabeth, in whose reign, besides several "banqueting and summer houses," it contained a few straggling cottages, and some good residences in the immediate neighbourhood of the religious houses: its increase was afterwards more rapid, and in 1619 noblemen and gentlemen were among its inhabitants. Since that time, the formation of numerous streets, and the more recent laying out of Spafields and the New River Company's estate, in a variety of new streets and squares, have rendered this one of the most populous districts in the vicinity of the metropolis.

The PARISH is lighted with gas, and the pathways are well flagged and kept in repair, under the superintendence of two separate Boards of Commissioners, one for each division of the parish, appointed under special acts: it is within the limits of the new police establishment. The inhabitants are supplied with water by the New River Company, whose works are situated in the parish, where the river terminates. This stupendous undertaking was projected in the reign of Elizabeth, and, in the following reign, James I. granted an act of parliament, enabling the mayor and commonalty of London to carry it into effect; but the commissioners, dreading the difficulty and expense, made no advances for some years. In 1609, Hugh Myddelton, a citizen and goldsmith of London, made proposals to the common-council of the city to undertake the work at his own risk, and to complete it in four years, for which purpose the commissioners transferred to him the powers with which they had been invested by the act. After having persevered in the enterprise till the water was brought to Enfield, the city refusing to grant him any pecuniary assistance, Myddelton applied to the king, who advanced sums of money, amounting in the whole to £6347, with which assistance the work was completed on the 29th of September, 1613. The river, from its source at Amwell, in Hertfordshire to Spafields, is 38 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles and 16 poles in length; there are nearly 300 bridges over it, and its course is continued through the varying levels of the districts through which it passes, by means of 40 sluices. The Regent's Canal passes on the north side of the parish.

Of the numerous Wells with which the parish abounded, several were in great repute for their medicinal properties, and houses of public entertainment were erected near their site. Of these, which were generally tea-gardens, and rendered more attractive by musical performances, the chief were Bagnigge Wells, White Conduit House, and New Tunbridge Wells, or Islington Spa, all still remaining. Of those which have for many years been discontinued were, the Pantheon, in Spafields, now a chapel belonging to the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion; the Cold Bath, in Coldbath-Fields, of which the bath alone is still frequented; the Mulberry and Vineyard gardens, now covered with buildings, and of which the names probably denote the purpose to which the ground was anciently appropriated; the celebrated bear-garden at Hockley in the Hole; and Sadler's Wells, near the New River Head, which has for many years been converted into a theatre for dramatic representations. Fons Clericorum, or the Clerks' well, is supposed to have been situated in Ray-street, where the spot is marked by a pump, with an inscription; but it is more probable that the original well, upon which a pump was afterwards erected, was in the centre of Clerkenwell Green, between the two religious houses; which is partly confirmed by the tenor of a deed of grant of the ground, by the ancestor of the Marquess of Northampton, wherein the right is reserved to the inhabitants of drawing water from this pump, the site of which is distinctly laid down in Stowe's Survey of London. The manufacture of clocks and watches, of which the several parts form distinct and separate departments of the trade, has for more than a century been carried on here to a considerable extent: when the duty on clocks and watches was imposed in 1791, not less than 7000 of the inhabitants were deprived of employment, and obliged to have recourse to parochial aid. There is a large manufactory for tin goods, which during the late war supplied the chief of the government contracts; also some extensive distilleries and soap-manufactories. The parish, with the exception of a detached portion of about 100 acres, locally situated in the parish of Hornsey, was, by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, constituted part of the newly-enfranchised borough of Finsbury, the elections for which take place on Clerkenwell Green. The sessions for the county, and the meetings of the magistrates for the assessment of the county rates, and for other affairs, are held at the Sessions-house on the Green, which was erected at an expense of £13,000, and was repaired and beautified a few years since: it is a spacious and handsome edifice, with a stone front, having in the centre four pillars of the Ionic order, rising from a rustic basement and supporting a pediment. A new police court for the district of Clerkenwell, the business of which was formerly carried on at Hatton-Garden, was built in Bagnigge Wells road, under the 2nd and 3rd of Victoria, cap. 71, and was opened December 16th, 1841: the building, which is a neat structure, with a frontage of 260 feet, consists of two distinct parts almost perfectly square, united by a bold archway. The new prison, for the confinement of prisoners awaiting their trial at the sessions, was erected near the site of the old Bridewell, which was incorporated with the present building; it was enlarged and partly rebuilt in 1818, and considerably extended in 1830, by the removal of several adjoining houses. The house of correction for the county, in Coldbath-Fields, was erected in 1794, at a cost of £70,000, including the purchase of the site, and has lately been much enlarged; it is a spacious brick building, inclosed with high walls; the average number of prisoners is about 1000.

The churches of St. James and St. John, formerly the only churches, have each a distinct parochial district attached, and the parish of St. James is subdivided into three parts, viz., the district of St. James', of St. Mark's, and of St. Philip's. The living of St. James' is a perpetual curacy, with Pentonville chapel; net income, £712; patrons, the Inhabitants of Clerkenwell generally, paying church and poor's rates. The church is a modern structure of brick, with a handsome stone steeple, erected between the years 1788 and 1792, on the site of the ancient church of the priory of St. Mary, which had been previously modernised, and which, prior to its being taken down, for the erection of the present edifice, retained many vestiges of its Norman character, and contained the ashes of the last prioress of the nunnery; the last prior of St. John's; Weever, the antiquary; Bishop Burnet, and many other distinguished characters. This conventual church, on being made parochial, at the time of the dissolution of the priory, was dedicated anew to St. James the Less. The living of St. John's is a rectory not in charge, in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £260. The church, with large curtailments and alterations, is the choir of that once belonging to the priory of the Knights Hospitallers: the ancient edifice was purchased of the Aylesbury family, in 1721, by Mr. Simon Michell, who, having repaired the choir, built the present west front, and covered the whole with a new roof, disposed of the church, and adjoining grounds, in 1723, for £2950, to the commissioners for building fifty new churches in Queen Anne's reign, who constituted it a parish church, and caused it to be consecrated on St. John's-day, December 27th. Notwithstanding that it enjoys the privilege of religious rites, the incumbent of St. James' is entitled to the surplice fees, which he has received since the year 1771, when a lawsuit was successfully prosecuted for their recovery: there are separate churchwardens for St. John's church, but the inhabitants of both districts contribute to the repairs of the two churches, and the same overseers of the poor act for the whole. St. Mark's, a district church, in Myddelton-square, containing 1622 sittings, of which 847 are free, was erected in 1826, by a grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners, at an expense of £16,000, and is a neat edifice, in the later English style, with a handsome western front, and a square tower having pierced parapet and pinnacles: the cost of furnishing it, which amounted to £2000, was defrayed by a rate voted by the vestry. The living is a district incumbency; net income, £480; patron, Bishop of London. St. Philip's, in the later English style, with a campanile turret, built in Granville-square, at an expense of £4418, and to which an ecclesiastical district has been assigned out of the district parish of St. Mark, was consecrated on January 1st, 1834, and was furnished by subscription: net income, £420; patron, Bishop of London. The chapel at Pentonville, a neat modern edifice of brick, ornamented with stone, and having a small cupola, was opened in 1788, under the provisions of the Toleration Act, and continued as a private chapel till 1791, when it was purchased by the parish for £5000, and consecrated as a chapel of ease to St. James'. Spa-fields chapel, formerly the Pantheon, as before noticed, was appropriated for a place of worship by the late Countess of Huntingdon, who for many years occasionally resided at the chapel-house adjoining; and at her decease here, in 1791, it was, agreeably to her will, vested in trustees, with other chapels in various parts of the kingdom. There are likewise meeting-houses for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan and other Methodists, besides a chapel in which the service is performed in Welsh.

The parish has the right of sending six scholars to the free school, founded by Alice Owen, for natives of this parish and of Islington; and of having three boys in Christ's Hospital, the latter under the will of Giles Russell, Esq., who, in 1664, devised property to that establishment, for nine boys of the town of Sherborne, in the county of Dorset, and of the parishes of St. Anne, Blackfriars, and St. James, Clerkenwell. The parochial school, founded about the year 1700, has recently been removed from the school-house in Aylesbury-street, to more convenient premises in Amwell-street, erected in 1829, at an expense exceeding £3000, and forming a spacious and handsome range of building in the Elizabethan style, capable of accommodating 1000 children. A school at Pentonville was instituted in 1788, and is in union with the National Society. The Spa-fields charity school, and the Claremont chapel school, are supported by subscriptions. The London Female Penitentiary at Pentonville, established in 1807, is a large range of building, comprising an infirmary, and apartments for 100 females. The Finsbury Dispensary was established in 1780; it was removed to St. John's-street in 1819, and to its present site in 1838. In addition to the two religious establishments previously noticed, a convent of Benedictines was founded in St. John's-square, in the reign of James II., by one "Father Corker," which was destroyed in the revolution of 1688. A portion of the Roman Watling-street, and the river of Wells (the Fleta of the Romans), form part of the boundaries of the parish. Among the distinguished natives and residents of Clerkenwell may be enumerated Sir Thomas Chaloner, Bishop Burnet, Sir John Oldcastle, and Baron Cobham; and Edward Cave, who established the Gentleman's Magazine, had his printing-office in St. John's gate, an engraving of which has, since the commencement of that publication, adorned the first page of its numbers.

CLEATHER (ST.), a parish, in the union of CAMELFORD, hundred of LESNEWTH, E. division of CORNWALL, 7 miles (E.) from Camelford; containing 221 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 11. 10½.; net income, £165; patrons, J. Carpenter and T. J. Phillips, Esqrs.; impropriator, Perpetual Curate of St. Thomas', near Launceston.

CLEVEDON (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of BEDMINSTER, hundred of PORTBURY, E. division of SOMERSET, 12 miles (W. by S.) from Bristol; containing 1748 inhabitants. This parish is pleasantly situated on the shore of the Bristol Channel, at the influx of the river Yeo, and comprises 2986a. 1r. 20p., chiefly meadow and pasture land; the soil is various, consisting in nearly equal portions of sand, loam, and clay. From its favourable situation on the coast, the village has lately become a bathing-place; the climate is remarkably mild, and myrtles and other delicate shrubs flourish in the open air at all times of the year. Clevedon Court, the seat of Sir Abraham Elton, Bart., is a spacious ancient mansion, in the later English style, and one of the finest specimens of the domestic style; it was extensively repaired by Sir J. Wake, then proprietor, in the reign of Elizabeth, and is beautifully situated on the southern slope of a mountainous range, which bounds the greater part of the hundred. A spacious hotel and several houses have been recently erected near the shore, for the accommodation of visitors. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15. 14. 4.; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. The great tithes have been commuted for £120, and the vicarial for £500; the glebe comprises 10 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church, an ancient cruciform structure, with a central tower, is situated on a commanding eminence on the shore of the channel, and at the western extremity of the village. A church, called Christ-church, in the early English style, erected and endowed chiefly at the expense of G. W. Braikenridge, Esq., was consecrated in August, 1839. There is a place of worship for Independents; also a national school. In 1650, Thomas Gwilliam, or Phillips, assigned six acres of land, producing £11 per annum, for apprenticing children; in 1687, John, Earl of Bristol, gave £5 per annum to the poor; and, in 1727, Sir Abraham Elton bequeathed £5 per annum, for instruction. On the summit of some of the hills are remains of ancient lead-mines, and lapis calaminaris has been found.

CLEVEDON, MILTON (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of SHEPTON-MALLET, hundred of BRUTON, E. division of SOMERSET, 2¼ miles (N. W. by N.) from Bruton; containing 213 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Bruton to Shepton-Mallet, and under the western declivity of the Bruton Hills: there are quarries of limestone, imbedded with numerous fossils, and which is used for building and burning into lime. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; patron and impropriator, the Earl of Ilchester: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £204. 6., and there are 34½ acres of glebe. The church is an ancient structure, and contains, in the chancel, the recumbent figure of an ecclesiastic, with a chalice between the hands. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A Duchess of Hamilton resided here, in an ancient mansion, that was taken down nearly a century since. On Small Down are vestiges of a fortification, near which skeletons of gigantic stature have been found.

CLEVELAND-PORT, a hamlet, in the parish of ORMESBY, union of GUISBOROUGH, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, 9 miles (N. by E.) from Stokesley; containing 63 inhabitants. The village is situated near the mouth of the Tees, affording a convenient point for shipping the greater part of the produce of Cleveland Vale and the surrounding neighbourhood, for the London and other markets.

CLEVELEY, a hamlet, in the parish of CHURCH-ENSTONE, union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Neat-Enstone; containing 198 inhabitants.

CLEVELODE, a chapelry, in the parish of POWICK, union of UPTON-ON-SEVERN, Lower division of the county of PERSHORE, Upton and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 6 miles (S. S. W.) from Worcester; containing 31 inhabitants. It comprises between 300 and 400 acres, chiefly meadow land; the site is elevated, and the surface undulated, and in some parts ornamented with wood. The river Severn flows past the village. This was formerly a separate rectory, and is stated to have been annexed to Madresfield in 1595: the chapel has been demolished.

CLEVELY, a township, partly in the parish of COCKERHAM, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, but chiefly in the parish of GARSTANG, union of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Garstang; containing 124 inhabitants.

CLEVERTON, a hamlet, in the parish of LEA, union and hundred of MALMESBURY, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Malmesbury; containing 116 inhabitants.

CLEWER (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of WINDSOR, hundred of RIPPLESMERE, county of BERKS, 1 mile (W.) from New Windsor; containing 3975 inhabitants. The parish, situated on the south bank of the Thames, contains part of the town of Windsor, and comprises 1666*a.* 1*r.* 12*p.*, of which about two-thirds are meadow land, and nearly all the rest arable. On a patent roll of the 13th of Edward II. is a grant to John the Hermit, of the chapel of St. Leonard, of Loffield, in Windsor Forest, to inclose some land, parcel of the forest, which probably gave name to St. Leonard's Hill, an elegant mansion built by the Duchess of Gloucester, when Countess Waldegrave, on the site of a cottage. A court leet is held annually; and a fair for toys and pedlery takes place on the 29th of May. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 1. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Eton College: the tithes have been commuted for £468. 19. 9., and the glebe contains nearly 24 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church contains several ancient memorials, among which are some verses on a brass plate, commemorating Master Expenca, a famous archer, who shot a match against one hundred men in Bray. There is a room in the village of Dedworth (one-half of which is in this parish), licensed by the bishop for divine service, and also used as an infants' schoolroom; it was erected by subscription, on land given by W. B. Harcourt, Esq., and is a neat building, suitable for a small chapel of ease. A Roman Catholic chapel was erected and is supported at the sole expense of W. F. Riley, Esq. In 1809, Sir James Poultney, Bart., left by will £666. 13. 4. in the three per cent. consols., for a school; and, in 1815, Earl Harcourt conveyed two cottages, a schoolroom, and £500 Navy five per cents., for instruction. A mineral spring was recently discovered.

CLEY (St. MARGARET), a small sea-port and parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of HOLT, W. division of NORFOLK, 26 miles (N. N. W.) from Norwich, and 124 (N. N. E.) from London; containing 828 inhabitants. In 1406, Prince James of Scotland, on his voyage to France, to receive his education, was driven by stress of weather upon this coast; and being detained here, he was sent to London by order of Henry IV., who committed him to the Tower. The surface of the parish is boldly undulated, and some of the elevations command very fine views by sea and land. The town is situated on the banks of a small river that falls into the harbour, at the north-eastern extremity of the county, and consists principally of one street, in the centre of which is the custom-house, a neat and commodious edifice; it is plentifully supplied with water from springs. The trade of the port, which is called Blakeney and Cley, consists principally in coal, timber and deals, hemp, iron, tar, tallow, oil-cakes, &c., of which the importation is considerable; a small trade is also carried on in malt: the exports are chiefly corn and flour. The navigation of the Cley is both narrow and of small depth, but in its course to the sea it forms a junction with the Blakeney channel. Under an act of inclosure, obtained in 1822, a large quantity of land has been recovered from the sea by an embankment. The market, held on Saturday, has long fallen into disuse; but a fair for horses is held on the last Friday and Saturday in July. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £22. 13. 4., and in the patronage of John Winn Thomlinson, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £400, and the glebe comprises 18 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church is a fine spacious structure, in the early English style, with portions of later date; the south porch is highly decorated, and has a fine groined roof; the nave is lighted chiefly by oriel windows of elegant design; the font is adorned with sculptured representations of the seven Sacraments of the Church of Rome. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists.

CLEYGATE, a manor, in the parish of THAMES-DITTON, Second division of the hundred of KINGSTON, union of KINGSTON, E. division of SURREY, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Esher; containing 940 inhabitants.

CLIBURN (St. CUTHBERT), a parish, in the West ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 6 miles (S. E.) from Penrith; containing 251 inhabitants. The parish is pleasantly situated between the rivers Eden and Lavennet, which bound it on two sides, and is intersected by the small river Lethe; it comprises 1769*a.* 2*r.* 11*p.*, whereof about 120 acres are woodland, and the remainder arable and pasture; the soil is partly of a dry, light, and sandy quality, partly moor, and partly a strong loam. In the parish is the small hamlet of Gilshaughlin, where, during the prevalence of the plague at Appleby, in 1598, the market for that town was held. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 1. 5½; net income, £188; patron, the Bishop of Carlisle. The tithes were commuted for land in 1806. The church is a small neat edifice, with a low tower. A school is endowed with an allotment of land, producing £21 per annum.

CLIDDESSEN, a parish, in the union and hundred of BASINGSTOKE, Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 1¼ mile (S. by W.) from Basingstoke; containing 306 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Farleigh-Wallop united, valued in the king's books at £10. 16. 3., and in the gift of the Earl of Portsmouth, with a net income of £685: the tithes of Cliddesden have been commuted for £550, and there is a glebe of 10½ acres. There is a school, endowed with £10 per annum by the Earl of Portsmouth.

CLIFF, with LUND, a chapelry, in the parish of HEMINGBROUGH, union of SELBY, wapentake of OUSE and DERWENT, E. riding of YORK, 3½ miles (E.) from Selby; containing 540 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 2500 acres, of which about 400 are open, but fertile, common. The village is of some length, and usually called Long Cliff. One of the stations on the Hull and Selby railway, which passes close to the village, is situated here. An act for inclosing lands was passed in 1843. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. In 1708, Mary Ward bequeathed £220 for a school, towards the further support of which Mr. Whittall gave £100.

CLIFFE (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of NORTH AYLESFORD, hundred of SHAMWELL, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Rochester; containing 842 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the north by the Thames, and comprises by computation 5500 acres, of which 2000 are arable, 3000 pasture, including a considerable portion of marshy land, and 500 wood. The village, which is supposed to take its name from the cliff or rock on which it stands, was formerly of much greater extent, a great part of it having been destroyed by fire in 1520: it was anciently the scene of several provincial councils. A pleasure-fair is held on Sept. 28th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £50; net income, £1297; patron, Archbishop of Canterbury: the glebe contains 20 acres. The church is considered the finest in the county, being a large handsome cruciform structure, in the early English style, with an embattled central tower, and containing several curious monuments and remains of antiquity, together with six stalls that belonged to a dean and five prebendaries, it having been formerly collegiate. There is an infants' school, endowed by John Browne with £10 per annum; and a national school is supported by subscription.

CLIFFE (St. THOMAS).—See LEWES.

CLIFFE, a township, in the parish of MANFIELD, union of DARLINGTON, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 5¾ miles (W. by N.) from Darlington; containing 54 inhabitants. It is on the south bank of the Tees, near Peirse Bridge, and comprises about 970 acres. The estate was for centuries the property of the family of Witham, but was lately sold, since which a Roman Catholic chapel here has been disused.

CLIFFE, KING'S (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of OUNDLE, hundred of WILLYBROOK, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 7 miles (W. S. W.) from Wansford; containing 1278 inhabitants. This was anciently the head of a bailiwick in the forest of Rockingham, called the Clive, and had a royal mansion, in which the kings of England passed some days in their progresses or hunting excursions, prior to the year 1400, from which circumstance the place took its name. The parish is situated on a slope, and surrounded by woods, and comprises by measurement 2200 acres. A small number of the population is employed in the manufacture of wooden-ware; and there are quarries of freestone and limestone, which are raised for building and manure. A market, not much frequented, is held weekly, on Tuesday, and a fair for cattle, horses, and cheese, on the 29th of October: the market cross was demolished in 1834. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 16. 3.; net income, £525; patron, Earl of Westmorland: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1809; the glebe contains 477 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a spacious cruciform structure, in the early and later English styles, with a tower rising from the centre, and contains some beautiful details; the pulpit, reading-desk, and open sittings, were formed out of ancient carved oak, formerly in the collegiate church at Fotheringhay, and placed here in 1818. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. Schools, and almshouses for six aged women, were respectively endowed by Mrs. Elizabeth Hutcheson and the Rev. William Law, with land comprising together 409 acres, producing an income of £407; in addition to which, an accumulation of £517 Reduced annuities yields £15 per annum. There are other almshouses, founded by John Thorpe, in 1688, for three aged women; a national school; and a school, commenced in 1831, and supported by subscription. Dr. Michael Hudson, chaplain to Charles I., was rector for a short time; and the Rev. William Law, author of the Serious Call, was born in 1686, at this place, where, after residing in it during the last twenty years of his life, he was buried. A Roman cemetery has lately been discovered, on an ancient road called "John's Wood Riding," which runs through the parish.

CLIFFE, NORTH, a township, in the parish of SANCTON, union of POCKLINGTON, Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 3 miles (S.) from Market-Weighton; containing 74 inhabitants. This place comprises by computation 1480 acres: the village, which is small, is situated near the foot of an abrupt acclivity rising from a sandy plain, and is on the road from Market-Weighton to North Cave.

CLIFFE-PYPARD (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of CRICKLADE and WOOTTON-BASSETT, chiefly in the hundred of KINGSBRIDGE, but partly in that of ELSTUB and EVERLEY, Swindon division, and partly in that of POTTERNE and CANNINGS, Chippenham and Calne division of WILTS, 4 miles (S.) from Wootton-Bassett; containing 933 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 4000 acres, of which the greater portion is meadow and pasture: the northern part is divided from the southern by a high and very steep ridge or cliff, from which the place takes its name, and which consists of a kind of chalkstone, whereof part is used for manure, and part of a harder kind is quarried for building and paving. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9; patron and improprator, H. N. Goddard, Esq., whose tithes have been commuted for £435. 18., and the vicarial for £590. The church is an ancient edifice, with a handsome tower of freestone: the nave is separated from the aisles by a range of five pillars and arches, supporting a richly-carved open roof of oak, and in the chancel are an ancient monument to one of the Goddard family, and a handsome monument of marble to Thomas Spaekman, a carpenter, who, having realized an ample fortune, bequeathed an endowment for a free school in the parish; the monument was executed at an expense of £1000. Sarah, Duchess Dowager of Somerset, in 1656, left the manor of Thornhill, in the parish, to Brasenose College, Oxford, for the foundation of certain scholarships; and the manor of Broadtown to trustees for apprenticing poor boys of the county of Wilts. Various Roman and Saxon coins have been found.

CLIFFE, SOUTH, a chapelry, in the parish of NORTH CAVE, union of POCKLINGTON, Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Market-Weighton; containing 136 inhabitants. It comprises 2025a. 1r. 8p., mostly of a light sandy soil, situated under the western ridge of the wolds; a large portion is rabbit-warren. On the west is the Market-Weighton canal, and on the east the road between Sancton and South Cave. The chapel, built in 1782, is endowed with land, the produce of which is applied to its repair.

CLIFFE, WEST (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of DOVOR, hundred of BEWSBOROUGH, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Dovor; containing 116 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Dovor to Deal, and comprises by measurement 1170 acres, of which 150 are meadow and pasture, and the remainder arable, with a few acres of woodland; the surface is gently undulated, and the soil in most parts chalky. The living is a discharged vicarage; net income, £34; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, whose tithes have been commuted for £391, and whose glebe contains 13 acres. The church is small, and roofed with tiles.

CLIFFORD (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of HAY, hundred of HUNTINGTON, county of HEREFORD, 2 miles (N. E.) from Hay; containing, with a part of the township of Vowmine, 892 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the borders of Wales, from which it is separated, on the west, by the Wye, the same river also bounding it on the north and north-east; it comprises by measurement 5500 acres, and the soil is in general clay and a sandy loam. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 10.; net income, £300; patron and incumbent, Rev. John Trumper; improprators, the Landowners. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a national school is supported by subscription. There are some portions of Clifford Castle remaining, in a ruinous condition: it stood on a bold eminence, projecting over the Wye, and was the baronial residence of the lords de Clifford for two centuries, and also, as it is supposed, the birthplace of Fair Rosamond. Here was anciently a convent of Cluniac monks, founded by one of the lords, as a cell to the priory of Lewes, in Sussex: at the Dissolution, its revenue was estimated at £75. 7. 5. Lord de Clifford derives his title from the parish.

CLIFFORD, with BOSTON, a township, in the parish of BRAMHAM, Upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Wetherby; containing 1566 inhabitants. The spinning of yarn and the manufacture and bleaching of cloth are carried on to some extent; the mill is propelled by the Bramham Bick, which flows through the township. There are also some quarries of good building-stone. A sheep fair is held on the Wednesday after Michaelmas-day. A district church, very eligibly situated, and forming a prominent object to the surrounding neighbourhood, has lately been erected: it is a handsome, but small, cruciform structure of stone, built by subscription, at an expense of £1200, on a site given by George Lane Fox, Esq., who contributed £100 of the amount; it is dedicated to St. Luke, was consecrated by the Archbishop of York on the 8th of June, 1842, and contains 300 sittings, of which about one-third are free. Mr. Lane Fox has also contributed £1000 towards its endowment, and £500 towards the erection of a parsonage-house. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CLIFFORD-CHAMBERS (St. Helen), a parish, in the union of STRATFORD-UPON-AVON, Upper division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, though locally in that of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Stratford; containing 309 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 15. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £172; patron and incumbent, Rev. A. Annesley. The church is a small structure, with a south door of Norman architecture. A Sunday school is supported by a bequest of £10 per annum.

CLIFTON (All Saints), a parish, in the union of BIGGLESWADE, hundred of CLIFTON, county of BEDFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. by N.) from Shefford; containing 865 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1450 acres, of which about 200 are pasture; the surface is generally level, and the soil in some parts clay, in others gravel. The river Ivel flows through the parish, and is navigable to Shefford. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 2. 11.; net income, £439; patron and incumbent, Rev. D. J. Olivier. The church contains some ancient monumental brasses, and a fine altar-tomb in memory of Sir Michael Fisher, lord of the manor, who died in 1549. A school was founded and endowed in 1827, by the Rev. D. S. Olivier, late rector.

CLIFTON, or ROCK-SAVAGE, a township, in the parish and union of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Frodsham; containing 34 inhabitants. This place has been called Rock-Savage, since the erection of a splendid house by Sir John Savage, in 1565. The township comprises only the manorial mansion and its demesne land, now in the possession of the Marquess of Cholmondeley, who enjoys the title of Earl of Rock-Savage.

CLIFTON, a chapelry, in the parish of ASHBOURN, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, though locally in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, S. division of the county of DERBY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. W.) from Ashbourn; containing, with the hamlet of Compton, 839 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary.

CLIFTON (St. Andrew), a parish, and favourite watering-place, and the head of a union, in the county of the city of BRISTOL, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (W.) from Bristol, 14 miles (N. W.) from Bath, and 121 (W. by S.) from London; containing 14,177 inhabitants. This place, by some antiquaries supposed to have been a British town prior to the Roman invasion, and to have been called Caeroder, or the "city of the chasm," derives its present name from its romantic situation on the acclivities and summit of a precipitous cliff, apparently separated by some convulsion of nature from a chain of rocks on the Somersetshire coast. The river Avon, which at spring tides rises to the height of 46 feet, and is then navigable for ships of very large burthen, flows with a rapid current through this natural chasm, forming the southern and western boundaries of the parish, and dividing the counties of Gloucester and Somerset. The lower part of the town, called the HOT WELLS, and formerly the more populous, is situated at the base of the cliff, and has a mild and genial atmosphere, peculiarly adapted to delicate and consumptive constitutions. It first rose into importance from the efficacy of its hot springs, originally noticed in 1480 by William of Worcester, the topographer of Bristol, and brought into general celebrity in 1632, when the water was applied externally in cases of cancer and scrofula, and internally in cases of inflammation, dysentery, and hemorrhage. These waters issue from an aperture in the rock, about ten feet above low-water mark; their mean temperature is about 71° of Fahrenheit; they contain a portion of sulphuric acid, but are peculiarly soft and pleasant to the taste, and free from any offensive smell. At the time of the earthquake at Lisbon, the water became so red and turbid for some days; as to be unfit for use. A new pump-room, with hot and cold baths, and containing also apartments for the residence of invalids, a neat building of the Tuscan order, has been recently erected at an expense of £8000, by the Society of Merchants of Bristol, who are lords of the manor of Clifton, near the site of the old house, which was built by subscription in 1770. Gloucester House, formerly the only hotel of any note, whence the steam-packets to Ireland regularly sail, is still much frequented, from its proximity to the Hot Wells, and the excellence of its accommodation. Dowry square and parade, Hope-square, Albemarle-row, and St. Vincent's parade, all contain respectable lodging-houses, fitted up with a due regard to the accommodation of visitors of every rank, and of which some have not unfrequently been the temporary residence of royalty. At Mardyke, on the lower road to Bristol, is a saline mineral spa, said to have been found efficacious in visceral complaints.

On the south-western brow of the hill, and protected on the north and east by the summit of the cliff, is situated that part of the town properly called CLIFTON, about half a century since consisting only of a few scattered dwellings, but now of piles of stately edifices of Bath stone, forming, from the beauty of their architecture, a conspicuous and imposing feature in the landscape for many miles. This portion, like the Hot Wells, owes its origin and rapid increase to the efficacy of a similar spring issuing from the rock at a lower elevation, into a well 320 feet in depth, sunk in the solid rock at an immense expense, in 1772, and from which 30,000 gallons of water are daily raised by a powerful steam-engine, and afterwards propelled to an additional height of 120 feet, and distributed through pipes to most of the respectable houses on the hill. There are some splendid ranges of buildings, and handsome hotels, with every requisite accommodation, and commanding most beautiful and extensive views. Near the summit of St. Vincent's Rock, so named from an ancient chapel dedicated to that saint, was a snuff-mill, which, by a grant from the lords of the manor, Mr. West, an ingenious self-taught artist, has converted into an observatory, furnished with powerful telescopes and a camera: it commands a most widely extended and diversified prospect, comprehending not only the picturesque and romantic scenery in the immediate neighbourhood, but a distant view of the Bristol Channel and the Welsh mountains, and the numerous pleasing villages with which the county of Gloucester is thickly studded. The nursery-grounds of Mr. Miller comprise more than 60 acres, beautifully laid out, and forming one of the most favourite resorts of this attractive place. There are some elegant private mansions, among which may be noticed that of Mr. Goldney, and that built by Sir William Draper, the opponent of Junius, in the front court of which are a plain monument to the distinguished Earl of Chatham, and a cenotaph to the memory of those officers and men of the 79th regt. who fell in India. The town is well lighted with gas, and improvements are constantly in progress. The Society of Merchants have formed a beautiful road, winding round the side of the rocks from the Hot Wells to Clifton Down; the extensive commons have been partially planted; and active measures have been adopted, and nearly sufficient funds raised, for the commencement of a suspension bridge over the Avon, of which a plan has been designed by Mr. Brunel, and which in grandeur and extent will far exceed that across the Menai strait. There is no regular market; but, from its proximity to Bristol, the town is well supplied with provisions of every kind; and the prices of all articles, either of clothing or food, may be considered on an average fully 15 per cent. lower than those of the metropolis. The town is within the jurisdiction of the Bristol court of requests, for debts from £2 to any amount under that for which an arrest on mesne process may issue. The freeholders of Clifton have been disfranchised for the county of Gloucester, and, together with the £10 householders, are entitled to vote for the representation of Bristol.

The parish contains 910 acres, comprehending the site of the town and adjacent buildings. The LIVING is a perpetual curacy; net income, £782; patrons, Trustees of the late Rev. C. Simeon; impropriator, James Taylor, Esq. The church, a spacious structure, in the later English style, was erected in 1822. A church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and accommodating 1600 persons, has been built at the Hot Wells, for the poor; and there are a private Episcopal chapel, and a district church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, the latter in the later English style, erected by the Bristol Diocesan Association. There are places of worship for the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion and Wesleyans; also a floating chapel for seamen, called the Clifton Ark; and a Roman Catholic chapel, in a superb style of Grecian architecture, lately built. Schools are supported by subscription; and there are a dispensary, and a dispensary for diseases of the eye. The poor law union of Clifton comprises 12 parishes or places, and contains a population of 66,233. On the summit of St. Vincent's Rock are the remains of an encampment, three or four acres in extent, defended by three ramparts and two ditches; the inner rampart, which is in no part more than five feet in height, is supposed to have been surmounted by a wall; its extent, from one side of the rock to the other, is 293 yards, and on the side next the river is a deep trench, thought to have been cut during the civil war of the seventeenth century. Its origin is ascribed to the Romans, who are said to have placed here the first of that chain of forts which they erected to defend the passage of the Severn. In the immediate neighbourhood, and in various parts of the parish, numerous Roman and Saxon coins have been found; and at a short distance, in the parish of Westbury, are the remains of a Roman way. In the rocks, lead and a very rich iron-ore have been discovered, but not in sufficient quantity to be worth working; and in the fissures of the rock, and more especially in digging the foundations of houses, are found the beautiful quartz crystals called Bristol diamonds, remarkable for their naturally formed and highly polished hexagonal surfaces, and equalling in transparency those of India, to which they are inferior only in hardness and durability; they are generally imbedded in nodulæ of iron-stone, of the same colour as the soil. Anne Yearsley, who in the humble situation of a milk-woman, displayed great poetical talent, and produced several literary works, was a native of this place; she died in 1806, at Melksham, in the county of Wilts. The late Sir Humphrey Davy commenced his career here, as assistant to Dr. Beddoes, an eminent physician; and among the numerous distinguished persons who have made it their retreat was Mrs. Hannah More, who here ended a life devoted to literature and good works.

CLIFTON, with SALWICK, a township, in the parish of KIRKHAM, union of the FYLDE, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Kirkham; containing 538 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £607, of which £530 are payable to the Dean and Chapter of Christ-Church, Oxford, £75. 6. 8. to the vicar, and £1. 13. 4. to the parish-clerk. In 1682, John Dickson left a small bequest for teaching children, and a school has lately been built, by aid of a grant of £50 from the National Society, with which it is in union.

CLIFTON, a township, in the parish of ECCLES, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Manchester; containing 1360 inhabitants. Collieries have been opened at this place, and its population has in consequence been greatly increased. The Manchester and Bolton railway passes by the north-east of the township.

CLIFTON, with COLDWELL, a township, in the N. division of the parish of STANNINGTON, union and W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Morpeth. It is situated on the great road between Morpeth and the township of Stannington, and is the property of the Earl of Carlisle. In the 12th century lands were held at Clifton, under Roger de Merlay, by William of Clifton: in the year 1240 the Conyers family appear to have been proprietors; and of subsequent owners have been the Ogles, Howards, and Greys. At Coldwell, which is now extinct, the monks of Newminster had possessions, and among others who had an interest in the same place may be named the families of Conyers and Heron.

CLIFTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BASFORD, N. division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Nottingham; containing, with Glapton, 419 inhabitants. The village is situated on a level tract, near which is Clifton Hall, commanding extensive prospects over the river Trent, the town of Nottingham, and the adjacent counties of Derby and Leicester. The Hall, which is now much modernised, has its principal front ornamented with 10 handsome Doric columns, and the interior comprises several magnificent apartments. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 6. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £405; patron and impropiators, Sir Robert Clifton, Bart. The church is a fine structure, though much dilapidated; it has a massive tower, and contains several monuments to the Clifton family. Here was anciently a small college for a warden and two priests, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and founded in the time of Edward IV., by Sir Gervase Clifton: at the Dissolution it was valued at £20 per annum.

CLIFTON, a township, in the parish of DEDDINGTON, union of WOODSTOCK, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (E.) from Deddington; containing 277 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CLIFTON (St. Cuthbert), a parish, in WEST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Penrith; containing 288 inhabitants. This place derives its name from the situation of the village on a rocky eminence in the vale of the river Lowther, by which the parish is bounded on the north and west. At Clifton Moor, now inclosed, a slight skirmish occurred between the Duke of Cumberland's dragoons and the rear-guard of the Pretender's army on its retreat to Scotland. The parish comprises 1676*a. 2r. 39p.*, of which about 35 acres are woodland; the soil is various, in some parts a dark brown mould on a substratum of gravel, in others a strong red soil resting on clay, and in some parts light and sandy. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 3. 4.; net income, £150; patron, the Bishop of Carlisle. The tithes were commuted for land in 1811. The church is a small ancient structure, with a low tower. There is a medicinal spring, the water of which is efficacious in the cure of scorbutic complaints.

CLIFTON, a township, partly in the parish of ST. MICHAEL-LE-BELFREY, and partly in that of ST. OLAVE, MARY-GATE, union of YORK, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W.) from York; containing 1242 inhabitants. Clifton House is the seat of the Rev. Danson Richardson Currer, M. A. and J. P. The village, which is large and handsome, forms a western suburb to the city. In 1820, two massive Roman stone coffins, each $7\frac{1}{2}$ feet in length, and bearing a short inscription, were found in the grounds of David Russell, Esq., and have been deposited in the Cathedral of York.

CLIFTON, with NORWOOD, a township, in the parish of FEWSTON, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 6 miles (N. by E.) from Otley; containing 387 inhabitants. The township comprises 3510 acres of moor and pasture land, with a little arable.

Church service is performed on every Tuesday in a schoolroom. There is an endowment of £9 per annum, arising from land, for the instruction of children.

CLIFTON, with NEWHALL, a township, in the parish of OTLEY, Upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 2 miles (N. N. W.) from Otley; containing 253 inhabitants, of whom 120 are in Clifton. The township is situated to the north of the river Wharfe, and comprises by computation 1440 acres of land.

CLIFTON, with HARTSHEAD, a chapelry, in the parish of DEWSBURY, union of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Huddersfield; containing, in the township of Clifton, 1779 inhabitants. The village extends to the western verge of the township, and from its elevated situation commands extensive views of the vale of the Calder, and of the surrounding country. The population is chiefly engaged in the manufacture of cards for machinery. A school is endowed with £10 per annum.—See HARTSHEAD.

CLIFTON-CAMPVILLE (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of TAMWORTH, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW, and of the county of STAFFORD, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Tamworth; containing, with the townships of Clifton-Campville and Haunton, and the chapelries of Harlaston and Chilcote, 921 inhabitants, of whom 341 are in the township of Clifton-Campville. The parish is watered by the small river Mease, and comprises by computation 6300 acres; the surface is undulated, and the soil is in some places a rich fertile marl, and in others a strong clay. The living is a rectory, with the chapelry of Chilcote, valued in the king's books at £30, and in the gift of Henry John Pye, Esq. The tithes were partly commuted for land and corn-rents, under an inclosure act, in 1795; the tithes of Clifton-Campville and Haunton have been commuted under the recent act for a rent-charge of £717; and a composition in lieu of tithes is received for Harlaston and Chilcote, amounting to about £400; the glebe contains 150 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. There are chapels of ease at Harlaston and Chilcote; and a parochial school is supported by the patron and incumbent.

CLIFTON, GREAT, a chapelry, in the parish of WORKINGTON, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 3 miles (E.) from Workington; containing 378 inhabitants. It contains by admeasurement 900 acres of arable and pasture land, and 39 of wood. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £89; patron, Rector of Workington. The tithes were commuted for land in 1814. The chapel, which is situated in Little Clifton, is an ancient structure. Here are the remains of a cross, where, according to tradition, a market was formerly held. The Rev. Jeremiah Seed, a theological writer, who died in 1747, was a native of the place.

CLIFTON-HAMPDEN (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of ABINGDON, hundred of DORCHESTER, county of OXFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Abingdon; containing 297 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £187; the patronage and impropriation belong to Mrs. Noyes.

CLIFTON, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of WORKINGTON, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Workington; containing 281 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 900 acres of arable and pasture land, and 50 of wood.

CLIFTON-MAYBANK (All Saints), a parish, in the union of SHERBORNE, hundred of YETMINSTER, Sherborne division of DORSET, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Sherborne; containing 70 inhabitants. It is intersected by the river Ivel, and comprises 1244*a.* 3*r.* 12*p.*, of which 781 acres are pasture, 215 arable, 202 woodland, and about 11 orchards; the surface is rather flat, and the lands in winter are subject to occasional inundation; the soil is light, but productive. The living is a rectory, united in 1824 to the vicarage of Bradford-Abbas, and valued in the king's books at £4. 16. 0*½*.; patrons, the Wardens and Fellows of Winchester College. The tithes have been commuted for £245, and the glebe comprises 30 acres. The church has been in ruins for a century.

CLIFTON, NORTH (St. George), a parish, in the union, and N. division of the wapentake, of NEWARK, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 12 miles (N. by E.) from Newark; containing, with the townships of North and South Clifton, the chapelry of Harby, and the hamlet of Spalford, 1056 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Trent, and on the lower road from Gainsborough to Newark, and comprises 3973*a.* 24*p.*; the surface is flat, with the exception of a slight eminence in one part, and the lands are subject to inundation of the river, from which the villages are protected by embankments. The soil is light, except that of the rising ground, which is a stiff clay and marl. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 6.; net income, £176; patron, Prebendary of Clifton, in the Cathedral of Lincoln; improPRIATOR, Col. Sibthorpe. The tithes, excepting about £20 per annum, from ancient inclosure, have been commuted for land, comprising nearly 150 acres. The church, situated about half-way between the villages of North and South Clifton, on a small eminence on the banks of the Trent, is an ancient structure, in the later English style, with a handsome square embattled tower. There is a chapel of ease at Harby, where also, and in South Clifton, are places of worship for Wesleyans. A schoolmaster receives £10. 10. per annum, arising from land bequeathed by Simon Nicholson, 1669, for instructing children. A schoolroom and dwelling-house were built by subscription, in 1779; there is also a school at Harby.

CLIFTON-REYNES (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. by S.) from Olney; containing 213 inhabitants. The principal manor here was given by William the Conqueror to Robert de Toden, one of the companions of his expedition, and it afterwards passed into the family of Reynes, from which the place takes the adjunct to its name. The parish, which is situated on the eastern bank of the river Ouse, comprises 1395*a.* 28*p.*; the surface is irregular, and the lower lands are subject occasionally to inundations of the river. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 10*½*.; net income, £300; patron and incumbent, Rev. H. A. Small. By a recent inclosure act, land of the value of about £120 per annum, was given in lieu of a portion of the tithes. There is a small glebe, part of which is in the adjoining parish of Newton-Blossomville, with a glebe-house. The church, a handsome edifice, is supposed to have been erected about the time of Edward I.

CLIFTON, SOUTH, a township, in the parish of NORTH CLIFTON, union, and N. division of the wapentake, of NEWARK, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 12 miles (N. by E.) from Newark; containing 332 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CLIFTON-UPON-DUNSMOOR (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of RUGBY, Rugby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 2 miles (E. N. E.) from Rugby; containing, with the chapelry of Brownsover and the hamlet of Newton and Biggin, 699 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the banks of the Avon, and comprises by admeasurement 3465 acres, of which 835 are in the chapelry of Brownsover; it is intersected by the road from Rugby to Harborough, and the London and Birmingham railway, which passes through it, has a first-class station within two miles, where is also a station for the Midland-Counties' railway. The Oxford canal likewise traverses the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 1. 8.; net income, £119; patron, Earl of Bradford: the impropriation belongs to two schools and 21 individuals; the glebe contains about 15 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is in the later English style, and had formerly a handsome spire. There is a chapel of ease at Brownsover; a parochial school is supported by subscription and a small legacy, and the inhabitants of the parish have the privilege of sending their children as free scholars to Rugby school. Cave, the originator of the Gentleman's Magazine, was born here; and Christopher Harvey, author of a collection of poems, called the Synagogue, and other works, was vicar, and was buried here in 1663. Thomas Carte, author of an elaborate History of England, was born here in 1686; and Lawrence Sheriff, the founder of Rugby school, was a native of Brownsover.

CLIFTON-UPON-TEME (St. Killom), a parish, in the union of MARTLEY, Upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Hundred-House and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 10 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Worcester; containing 512 inhabitants. The parish is situated near the river Teme, and comprises by measurement 2853 acres: stone of good quality for building and the roads, and flag-stone, are quarried. The village, which is beautifully situated on a steep cliff, overlooking the serpentine course of the Teme, was made a free borough by Edward III., who also granted a weekly market, now disused. Near it are the remains of Ham Castle, formerly the residence of the family of Jefferies, and which was nearly destroyed, in 1646, by the parliamentary troops. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 19. 2.; patron and impropriator, Sir T. E. Winnington, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £230. The church contains some ancient monuments. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is supported by subscription. There was anciently a chapel at Neverton, in the parish, but, in 1532, Charles, Bishop of Hereford, with the consent of the vicar of Clifton, and the inhabitants, united it to the parish of Stanford, reserving to the vicar an annual pension of 13s. 4d., in lieu of tithes and offerings due from the inhabitants of the chapelry.

CLIFTON-UPON-URE, a township, in the parish of THORNTON-WATLASS, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANG-EAST, N. riding of YORK, 4 miles (S. W.) from Bedale; containing 39 inhabitants. The manor of Clifton passed from the Lords Scrope, of Masham, to Sir Ralph Fitz-Randolph, and subsequently to the Wyvilles, Daltons, and Prestons, of whom the last-named sold it to the family of Hutton, in 1735. The township, which is situated on the eastern acclivities of the vale of the Ure, comprises 592 acres of land, by computation. Clifton Castle, a handsome mansion, stands in a fine and extensive park.

CLIMPING, a parish, in the union of EAST PRESTON (under Gilbert's act), hundred of AVISFORD, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, 7 miles (S. S. W.) from Arundel; containing 279 inhabitants. This parish includes all that remains of the ancient parish of Cudlow, of which not more than one hundred acres have escaped the encroachment and inundation of the sea; it is bounded on the south by the English Channel, and on the east by the river Arun, over which is a ferry, and is intersected by the road from Bognor to Little Hampton. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 11. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £221; patrons, the Provost and Fellows of Eton College; impropriators, the nominees of the Bishop of Chichester. The church is a handsome cruciform structure, chiefly in the early English style, with a fine Norman tower at the end of the south transept. A parochial school is supported by subscription.

CLINCH, a tything, in the parish of MILTON-LILBOURNE, union of PEWSEY, hundred of KINWARDSTONE, Everley and Pewsey, and S. divisions of WILTS; containing 106 inhabitants.

CLINCH, with FAWDON and HARTSIDE, a township, in the parish of INGRAM, union of GLENDALE, N. division of COQUETDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Alnwick; containing 54 inhabitants. It is a hilly district, occupying the south-eastern part of the parish: the hamlet is situated about a mile east of the village of Ingram. The tithes have been commuted for £31. 2. 8., of which £12. 10. are payable to the impropriator, £18. 11. 8. to the rector, and 1s. to the clerk of the parish.

CLINT, a township, in the parish of RIPLEY, Lower division of the wapentake, in CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ mile (W. by S.) from Ripley; containing 393 inhabitants. The township, which includes the hamlet of Burnt-Yates, comprises 1835a. 1r. 25p.: the village is a short distance from the river Nidd, which passes on the south. Here are the remains of an ancient mansion, called Clint Hall. The Roman road from Ilkley, through the forest of Knaresborough, branched in two directions at this place, one leading to Catterick, the other to Aldborough. A free school was founded, in 1760, by Rear-Admiral Robert Long, which received at the same time, and subsequently, several endowments, the total now producing upwards of £200 a year; and £5 per annum were bequeathed by William Mountain, in 1778, for distribution among twelve widows.

CLIPPESBY (St. Peter), a parish, in the EAST and WEST FLEGG incorporation, hundred of WEST FLEGG, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (N. E.) from Acle; containing 123 inhabitants. The parish comprises 861a. 1r. 24p., of which about 447 acres are arable, and 372 marsh and pasture; the old road from Norwich to Yarmouth runs through it. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of H. Muskett, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £245, and the glebe contains 3½ acres. The church is partly in the early and partly in the later style, and the chancel contains an altar-tomb to the memory of John Clippesby and his lady, whose effigies are inlaid in brass. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The old Hall, an ancient relic, is still standing, with some slight remains of the moat.

CLIPSHAM (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of STAMFORD, soke of OAKHAM, locally in the hundred of ALSTOE, county of RUTLAND, 9¾ miles (N. E. by E.) from Oakham; containing 206 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 0. 5., and in the patronage of the Coheireses of Mrs. Snow: the tithes have been commuted for £250, and the glebe comprises 51 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. A school is supported by subscription.

CLIPSTON (All Saints), a parish, in the union of MARKET-HARBOROUGH, hundred of ROTHWELL, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Market-Harborough; containing 859 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 2816 acres: it is a polling-place for the northern division of the county. The living is a rectory in three portions, two of which are valued in the king's books at £11. 12. 8½., and the third at £6; net income, £334; patrons, Master and Fellows of Christ's College, Cambridge. The free grammar school and hospital were founded in 1667, by Sir George Buswell, Bart., who endowed them with 186 acres of land, producing £305 per annum, to which an annual dividend of £20. 13. 4. on £688 three per cent. consolidated annuities has been added by other benefactors. In the hospital are ten men and one woman. The buildings comprise, in the centre, the schoolroom and apartments for the masters, and in the wings, apartments for the almspeople. Adjoining the parish, on the west, is an inship of several houses, called Nobold, ecclesiastically united to the parish, but in other respects extra-parochial.

CLIPSTON, a township, in the parish of PLUMTREE, union, and S. division of the wapentake, of BINGHAM, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 6¾ miles (S. E.) from Nottingham; containing 86 inhabitants. Richard I., after returning from the captivity brought on by his crusade to the Holy Land, had an interview with the King of Scotland, in 1194, at this place, where they spent several days.

CLIPSTONE, a township, in the parish of EDWINSTOW, union of SOUTHWELL, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 3¾ miles (W. S. W.) from Ollerton; containing 286 inhabitants, and comprising 1648 acres. On an eminence above the village are some remains of a very ancient palace that belonged to the Anglo-Saxon kings, and which is said to have been erected by one of the kings of Northumbria. It was frequently the residence of King John, both before and after his accession to the throne; and to it, also, all the sovereigns of England down to Henry V. appear to have repaired for the diversion of hunting in the royal forest of Sherwood, as we find that Henry de Fauconberge, in the reign of Henry III., held the neighbouring manor of Cuckney in serjeantry, by the shoeing of the king's palfrey on coming to Mansfield. A parliament was held here by Edward I. in 1290, and an old oak at the edge of the park is still called the Parliament Oak.

CLIST (St. George), a parish, in the union of St. THOMAS, hundred of EAST BUDLEIGH, Woodbury and S. divisions of DEVON, 1½ mile (N. E. by E.) from Topsham; containing 370 inhabitants. This parish, formerly called Clistwick, from its situation on the river Clist, comprises by computation 1000 acres; the surface is undulated, except near the banks of the river; the soil is in some parts a rich loam, in others clayey, and in some light and sandy, the whole in a state of good cultivation. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 16. 8.; net income, £348; patron and incumbent, Rev. W. R. Ellicombe. In the windows of the church are some remains of ancient stained glass. A school was founded, in 1703, by Sir Edward and Dame Seward, and has an exhibition of £4 per annum at either of the universities.

CLIST (St. Lawrence), a parish, in the union of St. THOMAS, hundred of CLISTON, Woodbury and S. divisions of DEVON, 5½ miles (S. by E.) from Cullompton; containing 168 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the river Clist, and in the fertile vale of that name, comprises 1040 acres; the soil is luxuriantly rich, consisting chiefly of a strong deep loam, producing the heaviest crops of corn and the finest cider in this portion of the county; veins of iron-ore are discernible in some parts. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 4. 4½.; net income, £244; patrons, the Trustees of St. John's Hospital, Exeter. The glebe comprises about 46 acres; the glebe-house, originally a portion of some ancient religious establishment, has been partly rebuilt. The church is a handsome structure, in the later English style, with a lofty square embattled tower, and contains a richly-carved oak screen; in a niche in the north-east wall is a Madona, and in the churchyard are the remains of a fine cross. The whole of the manorial rights and the lands were bequeathed by Eliza Hele, lady of the manor, in trust to the mayor and magistrates of Exeter for charitable purposes. There is a strong mineral spring at the base of a hill in the western part of the parish, said to be efficacious in diseases of the eye.

CLIST (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of St. THOMAS, hundred of EAST BUDLEIGH, Woodbury and S. divisions of DEVON, 2¼ miles (N. E. by N.) from Topsham; containing 197 inhabitants. This place is memorable as the scene of one of the principal contests between the adherents of the old religion and the reformers during the rebellion, in 1549, in which the inhabitants took part against the king's forces, and defended the long bridge against them with great bravery for some time, but were at length defeated, and pursued, with great slaughter, through the village to the adjoining heath. The parish is intersected by the river Clist, and comprises 534 acres by admeasurement. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 1. 3., and in the gift of the Rev. Edmund Strong: the tithes have been commuted for £150, and the glebe comprises 26 acres. A national school is supported.

CLIST, BROAD (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of St. THOMAS, hundred of CLISTON, Wonford and S. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (N. E.) from Exeter; containing 2407 inhabitants. This place was burnt down by the Danes in 1001. The old mansion of Columbjohn, in the parish, was garrisoned for Charles I. by his loyal adherent, Sir John Acland: it has a chapel, in which divine service is performed. The number of acres is about 9000; the surface is undulated, and the soil is partly a strong clay, and partly a deep light sandy earth. The river Clist runs through the parish, in which there is a paper-mill. Good cider is made. The living is a vicarage, endowed with part of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £26; net income, £407; patron, Sir T. D. Acland, Bart.; impropiator of the remainder of the rectorial tithes, Rev. Dr. Troyte. The church is a handsome edifice, in the later English style, containing three stone stalls, having rich canopies, with an effigy in plate armour. Sir T. D. Acland has built a church, in the Norman style, on his estate at Killerton, at a cost of about £3000; it was consecrated in September, 1841. On the manor of Clist-Gerald is a barn, once the chapel of St. Leonard; and there were also chapels dedicated to St. David and St. Catherine. A school, founded in 1691, is supported partly by an endowment of about £15 per annum. An almshouse for twelve persons was built by Mr. Burrough, who endowed it, in 1605, with £23. 11. per annum. John, Duke of Marlborough, is said to have been born at Churchill, in the parish.

CLIST-HONITON, a parish, in the union of ST. THOMAS, hundred of EAST BUDLEIGH, Woodbury and S. divisions of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Exeter; containing 467 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Clist, a small but rapid stream, that has given its name to almost every place through which it flows; it comprises by computation 1100 acres, and the soil is chiefly sandy, with some portions of rich vegetable mould on a stratum of pebbles. The village, which is on the bank of the river, suffered greatly from an accidental fire in 1825, that destroyed the greater portion of it. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, the appropriators: the tithes attached to the living have been commuted for £165, and the great tithes for £265. The church, erected since the Reformation, contains what is supposed by antiquaries to be the original Saxon font.

CLIST-HYDON (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of ST. THOMAS, hundred of CLISTON, Woodbury and S. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (S. S. E.) from Culmpton; containing 325 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1726 acres, of which 950 are arable, 627 pasture, and 30 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 0. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Mrs. Huyshe: the tithes have been commuted for £350, and the glebe contains 86 acres. A school is endowed with about £20 per annum, principally from a bequest of the Rev. Robert Hall, D.D., in 1667; and another is supported by subscription.

CLIST-SACKVILLE (ST. GABRIEL), a chapelry, in the parishes of FARRINGDON and SOWTON, union of ST. THOMAS, hundred of EAST BUDLEIGH, Woodbury and S. divisions of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Topsham; containing 286 inhabitants. This place was mortgaged by Sir Ralph Sackville to Walter Browncomb, Bishop of Exeter, to enable him to proceed with Edward I. on a crusade to the Holy Land, promising to refund the money at a fixed period, and to defray all charges on the estate during his absence: the bishop erected a palace, still standing, and fenced the ground at great charge, so that the expense exceeded the value of the land, in consequence of which it remained with him and his successors, until Bishop Vesey alienated it to the Earl of Bedford. The chapel has been demolished.

CLITHEROE (ST. MICHAEL), an unincorporated borough, market-town, and parochial chapelry, and the head of a union, in the parish of WHALLEY, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, on the eastern bank of the Ribble, 30 miles (N.) from Manchester, 49 (N. E.) from Liverpool, 26 (S. E.) from Arms.

Lancaster, and 216 (N. N. W.) from London; containing 6765 inhabitants. The ancient name of this town, Clidherow, is of a mixed derivation, from the British Cled-dwr, which signifies the hill or rock by the waters, and the final syllable how, a Saxon word for hill, being descriptive of its situation on an isolated eminence, terminating in one direction in a lofty rock of limestone, whereon stands the keep of a castle, the original erection of which is involved in considerable obscurity. The place was the scene of an engagement, in 1138, between a small party of the English army and the Scots, in which the former was totally defeated by superior numbers; and traces of this sanguinary conflict have been discovered near Edisforth Bridge, and along the banks of the Ribble. Some ascribe the foundation of the castle to Robert de Lacy the first; but, on the authority of a manuscript in the Bodleian Library, it is assigned to Robert de Lacy the second, in 1179, which account is confirmed by Dugdale, who states that the castle, and the chapel of St. Michael annexed thereto, were built by the latter: Dr. Whitaker, however, in his history of Whalley, considers it to be of earlier date. The castle originally consisted of a keep, with a tower, and arched gateway, and was surrounded by a strong lofty wall, built on the margin of the rock; it was used as a species of fortress for dispensing justice and receiving tribute by the Lacys, who were lords paramount of the honour. This honour, which extends over the parishes of Whalley, Blackburn, Chipping, and Ribchester, the forest of Bowland, and the manors of Tottington and Rochdale, and includes 28 manors, formed part of the possessions of the house of Lancaster, from the time of the marriage of Thomas Plantagenet, Earl of Lancaster, with Alice, sister and heiress of Henry de Lacy, until that of the Restoration, when Charles II. bestowed it upon General Monk, Duke of Albemarle, for his services: it has a court for the recovery of small debts, extending over the hundred of Blackburn; and a similar court is held for the wapentake of Bowland. During the wars of the Roses, Henry VI., on his deposition, sought a temporary refuge here among the hereditary dependents of the house of Lancaster, but was betrayed to his rival by the Talbots of Bashall and Colebry, and sent bound to London. In the civil war the fortress was among the last surrendered to the parliament, by whose directions, in 1649, it was dismantled; the keep, a square tower, being all that remains. The site, and a certain portion of ground occupied by the demesne and forests of the baronial edifice, are extra-parochial, and commonly designated the Castle parish. A modern castellated edifice has been erected within the precincts of the castle. An hospital for lepers, called the Hospital of Edisforth, was founded here by some of the earliest burgesses, and dedicated to St. Nicholas, which shared the fate of the smaller monasteries at the Dissolution.

The TOWN, from its elevated position, is clean and pleasantly situated; the houses, consisting principally of shops, are neatly built; the streets are Macadamized, and lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from several springs. The neighbourhood abounds with an almost inexhaustible bed of limestone; and at Pimlico, a short distance northward from the town, ten kilns are kept burning forty weeks in the year, and produce in the aggregate 4000 windles, or 28,000 strikes weekly. In Hardhill Park is a race-course; and immediately outside the town is a spa, with hot and cold baths, extremely efficacious in scorbutic affections. There are extensive cotton-manufactories and print-works, which are yearly increasing, in the town and its vicinity. The market is on Tuesday: fairs are held on the 24th and 25th of March, 1st and 2nd of Aug., on the fourth Friday and Saturday after the 29th of Sept., and on the 6th and 7th of December; and there is also a fair for cattle and sheep every alternate Tuesday. Clitheroe is a BOROUGH by prescription: its first charter, dated in the time of Henry de Lacy, who died in 1147, was confirmed by Edward I., who granted the burgesses the same privileges as those enjoyed by the citizens of Chester, and subsequently by Edward III., Henry VIII., and James I. By the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, the corporation now consists of 4 aldermen and 12 councillors, and the mayor is elected annually out of that body; the municipal boundaries are co-extensive with those of the township of Clitheroe. The Moot-hall is a neat modern edifice, ornamented in front with the borough arms cut in stone, and surmounted by a spire 62 feet high. There is a court of pleas, having jurisdiction to an unlimited amount, in actions of debt arising within the borough; it is holden every three weeks before the recorder and mayor, and has existed from time immemorial. The mayor and late mayor are justices of the peace; and a police has been established under the corporation, consisting of a chief constable and assistants. The borough did not return members to parliament until the first year of the reign of Elizabeth, from which period it regularly sent two, till it was deprived of one by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45. The privilege of voting is exercised by the £10 householders, of whom there are about 400; the old borough comprised 2283 acres, but the limits of the present electoral borough embrace 13,788; the mayor is returning officer. The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rev. J. H. Anderton; net income, £127, with a glebe-house. The church has been lately rebuilt, with the exception of the tower and the east window, a good specimen of the later English style: the Incorporated Society, in 1827, granted £1500 towards defraying the expense. The former edifice was of great antiquity, being designated, in a deed of the 13th of Edward IV., the church of St. Mary Magdalene; against the south wall of the nave was a brass plate, bearing a curious enigmatical diagram, and an inscription in Latin to the memory of Dr. John Webster, the celebrated judicial astrologer, and curate of Clitheroe, who was interred here, June 21st, 1682. In 1838, an additional church, dedicated to St. James, was erected by subscription, aided by James Thomson, Esq., of Primrose, who, and his family, were the principal contributors. There are places of worship for Independents, Methodists, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school was founded in 1554, by Philip and Mary, and endowed with the rectorial tithes of the parish of Almondbury, and with certain lands in the district of Craven, in Yorkshire; the head master receives a salary of £200, and has a handsome residence, and the second master is allowed £100. The poor law union of Clitheroe comprises 33 parishes or places, of which 19 are in the West riding of York, and 14 in the county of Lancaster; and contains a population of 23,018. The Rev. James King, afterwards chaplain to the house of commons, and father of Captain James King, who accompanied Captain Cook in his voyage of discovery round the globe, and of the Right Rev. Walker King, Bishop of Rochester, was, during the early part of his ministry, incumbent of Clitheroe.

Corporation Seal.

CLIVE, a township, in the parish of MIDDLEWICH, union and hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Middlewich; containing 117 inhabitants. The Grand Junction railway passes through the township. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £45. 14.

CLIVE, a chapelry, in the parish of ST. MARY, liberties of the town of SHREWSBURY, union of WEM, N. division of SALOP, 3½ miles (S.) from Wem; containing 273 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £66, and in the gift of the Bishop of Lichfield, (as ex officio visiter of Shrewsbury grammar school,) Viscount Clive, J. A. Lloyd, Esq., Sir A. V. Corbet, Bart., and R. A. Slaney, Esq.: the impropriation is vested in the governors of the grammar school. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints. There is a school supported by subscription. William Wycherley, the poet, was born here in 1640.

CLIVIGER, a chapelry, in the parish of WHALLEY, union of BURNLEY, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Burnley; containing 1395 inhabitants. There is a national school.

CLIXBY, a chapelry in the parish and union of CAISTOR, S. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 2½ miles (N. by W.) from Caistor; containing 45 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Caistor.

CLOATLY, a hamlet, in the parish of HANKERTON, union and hundred of MALMESBURY, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS, 3½ miles (N. E.) from Malmesbury; containing 77 inhabitants.

CLODOCK (St. CLEODOCUS), a parish, in the hundred of EWYASLACY, county of HEREFORD, 10 miles (N. N. E.) from Abergavenny; containing, with the chapelries of Crasswall, Llanveynoch, and Longtown, and the township of Newton, 1762 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1800 acres, about three-fourths of which are pasture and meadow land, and 200 acres woodland; the surface is very irregular, rising into numerous hills of various elevation, and a considerable portion of it extends along the side of the Black Mountain, or Hatterel Hills; the soil is generally light. The rivers Olchon and Munnow have their source within the parish, which is also traversed by the Eskley, a stream that abounds with trout of excellent quality, and is much frequented by anglers. Fairs are held on the 29th of April, 22nd of June, and 21st of September. The living is a vicarage, not in charge; net income, £149; patron, W. Wilkins, Esq.; impropiator, Sir V. G. Cornewall, Bart. There are chapels of ease at Longtown, Llanveynoch, and Crasswall, in the patronage of the vicar; and a fourth chapel has recently been built. A parochial school has an endowment of £4 per annum.

CLOFFOCK, an extra-parochial liberty, adjoining the parish of Workington, union of COCKERMOUTH, in ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND; containing 4 inhabitants. It consists of an extensive tract of common, lying on the north side of the town of Workington, and is completely surrounded by the river Derwent and a small stream. Races are held annually; and at the western extremity of the place are a quay and a patent-slip. A portion of the ground is called Chapel Flat, and is thought to have been the site or property of a religious house.

CLOFORD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of FROME, E. division of SOMERSET, 4½ miles (S. W.) from Frome; containing 253 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 17. 6.; patron and impropiator, S. T. Horner, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £40, and the vicarial for £135; the glebe comprises 6 acres. There is a place of worship for a congregation of Wesleyans.

CLOPHILL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of AMPHILL, hundred of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, 1 mile (N. by E.) from Silsoe; containing 1066 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2340 acres, of which about 1400 are arable, and 700 pasture; the soil is light and sandy, with some portions of gravel, clay, and moorland; the surface is rather hilly, and the lower grounds are subject to inundations of the river Ivel, which flows through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12; net income, £522; patron, Earl de Grey. The tithes have been commuted for £239, and the glebe contains 70 acres, to which there is a good glebe-house. The church stands upon an eminence at some distance from the village. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. At Cainhoe are vestiges of the ancient moated castle of the Barons d'Albini: the hill on which it stood is high and steep, and overgrown with coppice wood. Here was a religious house, probably a cell to St. Alban's Abbey.

CLOPTON, a hamlet, in the parish of MICKLETON, union of SHIPSTON-UPON-STOUR, Upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 27 inhabitants.

CLOPTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WOODBRIDGE, hundred of CARLFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (N. W.) from Woodbridge; containing 389 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2107 acres; the soil is partly strong clay, and partly of a mixed quality; the surface is rather hilly, and the scenery varied; a small stream winds through the lower grounds. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 13. 4.; net income, £538; patron and incumbent, Rev. George Taylor. The church is ornamented with four beautiful windows, in the later English style, and has a handsome square tower. There are about 14 acres of land and four tenements, the rent of which is applied to the expenses of the church, and the relief of the poor.

CLOSEHOUSE, with HOUGHTON, a township, in the parish of HEDDON-ON-THE-WALL, union of CASTLE ward, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7¼ miles (W. by N.) from Newcastle; containing 127 inhabitants. The township, which includes the hamlet of Street-Houses, is situated on the north side of the Tyne. The mansion of Closehouse is a handsome structure, delightfully situated in a fine lawn above the river. A school at Houghton, built by Mrs. Bewick in the year 1823, is supported by that lady.

CLOSWORDH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of YEOVIL, hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BARWICK, and COKER, W. division of SOMERSET, 4½ miles (S. by E.) from Yeovil; containing 164 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Yeovil to Dorchester, and comprises 1071a. 1r. 39p.: stone of good quality for building purposes, also used in the formation of drains, is quarried. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 8. 11½., and in the gift of Lord Portman: the tithes have been commuted for £202. 12., and the glebe comprises nearly 12 acres, with a glebe-house. The church is a handsome structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower. In a field called Barrow Hill, several skeletons were discovered a few years since.

CLOTHALL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of HITCHIN, hundred of ONSEY, county of HERTFORD, 2½ miles (S. E.) from Baldock; containing 495 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 3360 acres, chiefly arable land; the surface is gently undulated, and the scenery pleasingly diversified; the soil is partly chalk, gravelly loam, and clay. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 0. 7½.; net income, £661; patron, Marquess of Salisbury. The church is built of flint and stone, and has a square tower surmounted by a spire; it contains several effigies and inscriptions in brass. Here was a free chapel or college, of ancient foundation, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, for a master, brethren, and sisters, and which was valued at £4. 2. 8., and continued till the Dissolution. Thomas Stanley, son of Sir Thomas Stanley, Knt., and author of the History of the Philosophers, was born here in 1625; he died in 1678, and was buried in the church.

CLOTHERHOLME, a township, in the parish and liberty of RIPON, W. riding of YORK, 2 miles (N. W. by W.) from Ripon; containing 10 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 830 acres of land. The tithes have been commuted for £6. 10., payable to the Dean and Chapter of Ripon.

CLOTTON-HOOFIELD, a township, in the parish of TARVIN, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Tarporley; containing 417 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £171. 1., of which £110. 1. are payable to the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, and £61 to the vicar of the parish.

CLOUGHTON, a chapelry, in the parish of SCALBY, union of SCARBOROUGH, PICKERING lythe, N. riding of YORK, 4½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Scarborough; containing 454 inhabitants. This place is situated on the road from Scarborough to Whitby, and is bounded on the east by the North Sea; the township comprises about 3510 acres, of which a portion is moorland hills. Quarries of excellent freestone are wrought. The chapel has been rebuilt. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school was rebuilt in 1835.

CLOVELLY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BIDEFORD, hundred of HARTLAND, Great Torrington and N. divisions of DEVON, 11 miles (W. by S.) from Bideford; containing 950 inhabitants. At this place was a Roman trajectus from Carmarthen; and, till within the last few years, the remains of a fort, erected by the Romans for the defence of the pass, were plainly discernible. The village is romantically situated, in a district abounding with geological attractions, on the declivities of a shelving and precipitous rock, rising abruptly from the Bristol Channel to the height of several hundred feet above the harbour, and crowned with luxuriant verdure. The harbour, which, together with that of Hartland, is an appendage to the port of Bideford, though small, is remarkable for its security, and is partly formed by a substantial pier erected by a member of the family of Carew, by one of whom the manor was purchased in the reign of Richard II. A considerable trade is carried on in the herring fishery, for which Clovelly is the most noted place on the coast; the herrings are esteemed the finest taken in the Channel, and the fishery furnishes employment to the principal part of the labouring class. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 11. 5½., and in the patronage of Sir J. H. Williams, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £200, and the glebe contains 78 acres. The church, which was made collegiate for a warden and six chaplains, by the family of Carew, in the 11th of Richard II., contains some handsome monuments. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school for girls is supported by Lady Mary Williams. On the summit of the heights above the village is a large encampment, called Dichen, or the Clovelly ditches, consisting of three trenches, or dykes, inclosing a quadrilateral area, 360 feet in height and 300 in breadth.

CLOWN (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of WORKSOP, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, 9 miles (E. N. E.) from Chesterfield; containing 677 inhabitants. It comprises about 1855 acres, of which 1262 are arable, 521 pasture, and 58 wood; the greater portion of the surface is high ground; and the remainder undulated; the soil on the high lands is a thin loam on a substratum of limestone, and in the lower inclined to clay. There are numerous springs of excellent water, which, uniting their streams, fall into a brook flowing to Welbeck. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. Tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1778, and under the recent act a commutation has been made for a rent-charge of £330; the glebe contains 67 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church has Norman portions, amidst various later styles. Charles Basseldine, in 1730, founded a school, with an endowment of thirteen acres of land, now producing £26 per annum. There is a chalybeate spring.

CLUN (ST. GEORGE), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of PURSLOW, S. division of SALOP, 26 miles (S. W.) from Shrewsbury, and 157 (N. W. by W.) from London; containing 2077 inhabitants. This place takes its name from the river Colun, or Clun, which, rising in the forest of that name, 6 miles to the west, divides the town into two parts, and pursues an easterly course towards Ludlow. In the reign of Stephen, or, according to Camden, in that of Henry III., a castle was erected by Fitz-Alan, afterwards Earl of Arundel, on a lofty eminence overlooking the river, the proprietor of which anciently possessed the power of life and death over his tenants; it was demolished by Owain Glyndwr in his rebellion against Henry IV. The remains present an interesting and picturesque object in the surrounding landscape, and consist of the lofty and massive walls of the keep and the banquet-hall; and considerable masses of the ruins in various parts of the area indistinctly mark out both the ancient form and extent of this once stately pile. In the reign of Henry VIII. the parish was by statute annexed to, and made part of, the newly formed county of Montgomery, from which it was afterwards severed, and included in that of Salop. An act was passed, in 1837, for inclosing 8600 acres in the forest of Clun, and in 1839, one for inclosing 1700 in the township of Clun; several acres are set apart for the recreation of the inhabitants. The town is pleasantly and romantically situated, on a gentle eminence surrounded by hills of bolder elevation, and consists principally of one long irregular street on the north bank of the river, over which is an ancient stone bridge of five sharply-pointed arches, leading to that part of the town where the church stands: the houses are in general built of ragstone, with thatched roofs, occasionally interspersed with some of more modern structure; and the inhabitants are well supplied with water. The market is on Wednesday: the fairs are on Whit-Tuesday and Sept. 23rd, for cattle, sheep, and pigs; and Nov. 22nd, which is a statute and a large cattle fair. Clun, formerly a lordship in the marches, was first incorporated by the lords marchers, whose charter was confirmed to Edmund, Earl of Arundel, in the reign of Edward II., at which time its prescriptive right was admitted; but the charter not having been enrolled in chancery, and all the records of the lords marchers having been destroyed, its being an incorporated borough was proved by parole evidence. The government is vested in two bailiffs, a recorder, two serjeants-at-mace, and subordinate officers; and the bailiffs hold a court of record for the recovery of debts to any amount. The hundred court, for the recovery of debts under 40s., is held every third Wednesday, and courts leet in May and Oct.; at that in Oct. constables are appointed. The town-hall is a neat modern stone building, supported on arches.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 10. 5.; net income, £680; patron and improprator, Earl of Powis. The church, which was formerly dependent on the priory of Wenlock, is a very ancient structure, in the earliest period of the Norman style, and has evidently been of much greater extent than it is at present, having had several chapels attached to it. It has a low tower of very large dimensions and of great strength, with a pyramidal roof, from the centre of which rises another of similar form, but smaller; and the arch under the tower that forms the western entrance, bears a strong resemblance to the Saxon, and it is not improbable that this part of the building existed before the Conquest; the northern entrance is under a highly ornamented Norman arch, on the east side of which is an arched recess, richly cinquefoiled, and probably intended for the tomb of the founder. The Incorporated Society made a grant, in 1841, of £150, for the erection of a chapel at Chapel Lawn, in the parish, to contain 232 sittings. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is supported by endowment from Mrs. Richard Gough, and another by subscription. Clun Hospital, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was founded, in 1614, and endowed by Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton with tithes producing a revenue of £1000 per annum: the establishment consists of twelve poor brethren, and a warden, and the management is vested in the bailiff, vicar, and churchwardens, the steward of the lordship, the rector of Hopesay, and the warden of the hospital; the Bishop of Hereford is visitor. The buildings comprise a quadrangle 40 yards in length, and the same in breadth, in one angle of which is a neat chapel. The poor law union of Clun comprises 19 parishes or places, namely, 17 in the county of Salop, one in Salop and Montgomery, and one in Montgomery; and contains a population of 10,924. Within a quarter of a mile to the north-west of the town, is a single intrenchment, said to have been raised by Owain Glyndwr, as a shelter for his troops during their attack on the castle; and within half a mile to the south, is Walls Castle, the station from which it was battered. About two miles and a half to the north-east, is the camp of Ostorius, the station occupied by that general in his last battle with Caractacus; and about five to the south-east, near the confluence of the rivers Clun and Teind, and within a mile of Walcott, the seat of the Earl of Powis, are the Caer, or Bury Ditches, the station of the British hero, and the scene of his last effort against the Roman power. The camp, which is of an elliptic form, comprehends an area of from three to four acres, on the summit of a very lofty eminence, commanding an extensive view of the surrounding country; the steep acclivities are defended by a triple intrenchment of amazing strength, which, though overgrown with turf, is still in a state of entire preservation. This fortification, evidently a work of prodigious labour, is one of the most interesting in the country, and, under the care of the Earl of Powis, is preserved with a due regard to its historical importance. In making a road from Clun to Bishop's-Castle, in 1780, several cannon-balls were found.

CLUNBURY (St. SWITHIN), a parish, in the union of CLUN, hundred of PURSLOW, S. division of SALOP; containing 994 inhabitants, of which number 258 are in the township of Clunbury, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Bishop's-Castle. This parish, which is situated in the heart of a sequestered district, abounding with romantic scenery, comprises by computation 6000 acres, exclusively of woods and common. There are some quarries of stone for building and mending the roads. The village is beautifully situated at the foot of a lofty hill, and surrounded with woods and plantations. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £120; patron and improprator, Earl of Powis. The church is a neat ancient structure. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans; and a school on the national system is endowed with £6. 6. per annum.

CLUNGUNFORD (St. CUTHBERT), a parish, in the union of CLUN, hundred of PURSLOW, S. division of SALOP, 9 miles (S. E. by S.) from Bishop's-Castle; containing, with the extra-parochial liberty of Dinmore, 554 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Clun: limestone abounds, and is quarried for building and for burning into lime. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16; net income, £530; patron and incumbent, Rev. John Rocke. The church is an ancient structure. The trustees of Francis Walker, in 1682, founded and endowed a school, the income of which, increased by other bequests in 1712, amounts to £46 per annum. The Roman Watling-street intersects the parish from north to south, and in the neighbourhood are two tumuli.

CLUNTON, with KEMPTON, a township, in the parish of CLUNBURY, union of CLUN, hundred of PURSLOW, S. division of SALOP, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Bishop's-Castle; containing 520 inhabitants, of whom 304 are in Clunton.

CLUTTON, a township, in the parish of FARNDON, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 10 miles (S. S. E.) from Chester; containing 110 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £65. 0. 6., of which £64. 10. 6. are payable to the improprator, and 10s. to the perpetual curate of the parish. There is a school, endowed with £14 per annum.

CLUTTON (St. AUGUSTINE), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of CHEW, E. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Pensford; containing 1434 inhabitants. The parish, which comprises 1671 acres by measurement, abounds with coal, and mines are worked to a considerable extent, affording employment to a very large portion of the population. There are also extensive quarries of stone for paving and building, and of limestone, and several kilns for burning lime; and iron-ore is found in the coal-mines and in other places. The village, which is on the road from Bristol to Wells and Shepton-Mallet, is a polling-place for the Eastern division of the county. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 4. 2., and in the gift of the Earl of Warwick: the tithes have been commuted for £308, and the glebe comprises 56 acres. The church is an ancient structure, in the Norman style; between the nave and chancel is a highly enriched arch. There are places of worship for Methodists and Independents.

A school, founded in 1728, is endowed with £20 per annum; another is conducted in a large room, built upon land given by the Earl of Warwick; and from a charge upon church lands, and the interest arising from some charities, boys are taught upon the national system. The poor law union comprises 29 parishes or places, and contains a population of 25,046. In the vicinity are vestiges of an ancient fortification, called Highbury, where British weapons and Roman coins have been found.

CLYTHA, a hamlet, in the parish of LLANARTH, union of ABERGAVENNY, division and hundred of RAGLAN, county of MONMOUTH, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Raglan; containing 335 inhabitants. This place, situated on the left bank of the river Usk, and intersected by the high roads leading from Abergavenny to Monmouth and Usk, contains by estimation 1503*a. 2r. 17p.*, of which 683 acres are arable, 776 pasture and meadow, and 44 woodland. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £115, and there is a glebe of about 2 acres. Clytha House, the seat of William Jones, Esq., is a handsome mansion, in the Grecian style, with a noble portico, standing in tastefully laid out grounds; near it are the remains of an ancient chapel, and on the brow of a lofty eminence contiguous stands a castellated building, erected in 1790, by the late William Jones, Esq., to the memory of his lady, and from whence is a beautiful and extensive view of the vale of the Usk, with the Blorange, Sugar Loaf, and Skirrid mountains, in the distance. Upon the summit of another eminence, at the extremity of the Clytha hills, is a small encampment, called Coed-y-Bunedd, which retains marks of having been strongly fortified.

COAL-ASTON, a township, in the parish of DRONFIELD, union of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. by E.) from Dronfield; containing 352 inhabitants. Here is a school, with a trifling endowment.

COAL-PIT-HEATH, a hamlet, in the parish of WESTERLEIGH, union of CHIPPING-SODBURY, hundred of PUCKLE-CHURCH, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 387 inhabitants.

COALEY (St. Bartholomew), a parish, in the union of DURSLEY, Upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Dursley; containing 979 inhabitants. It comprises 2460 acres, of which 1900 are pasture, 300 arable, and 90 woodland. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 2. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown; impropiator, S. Jones, Esq. Tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1801; and under the recent act, impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £56. 14., and vicarial for one of £300. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and national schools have been established.

COANWOOD, EAST, a township, in the parish and union of HALTWHISTLE, W. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (S.) from Haltwhistle; containing 139 inhabitants. It was anciently called Collingwood, which, in its Welsh form of Collen-gwydd, means hazel-trees or hazel-wood, with which the district formerly abounded, until, in consequence of the mining operations in the vicinity (converting the wood into charcoal) the article became scarce, existing now only in certain places, where, however, it is very plentiful. The township contains the hamlets of High and Low Ramshaw, and Gorbet-hill, and has a coal-mine, called the Rig-pit, in operation. There is a place of worship for the Society of Friends.

COAT, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of MARTOCK, union of YEOVIL, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 175 inhabitants.

COATE, a tything, in the parish of BISHOP'S-CANNINGS, union of DEVIZES, hundred of POTTERNE and CANNINGS, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 303 inhabitants.

COATE, a tything, in the parish of LIDDINGTON, union of HIGHWORTH and SWINDON, hundred of KINGSBRIDGE, Swindon and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 43 inhabitants.

COATES (St. Matthew), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Cirencester; containing 373 inhabitants. It is bounded on the north by the high road from Stroudwater to London, and on the east by that from Cirencester to Bath: stone of excellent quality is quarried for buildings, and for general purposes. The Thames and Severn canal passes through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 6. 8.; net income, £369; patron, W. Dewe, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1792: the glebe contains 509 acres, chiefly arable, to which there is an excellent glebe-house. A school is supported at the expense of the rector and a few subscribers. At Trewsbury, in the parish, near the place where the castle formerly stood, the remains of which, with the intrenchments, may yet be seen, is a well, supposed to be the source of the Thames, and called the Thames head.

COATES, a tything, in the parish and union of WINCHCOMBE, Lower division of the hundred of KIFTS-GATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER.

COATES (St. Edith), a parish, in the union of GAINSBOROUGH, W. division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Lincoln; containing 47 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £3. 16. 8.; net income, £50; patron and impropiator, Sir J. Ramsden, Bart.

COATES, a parish, in the union of SUTTON (under Gilbert's act), hundred of BURY, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, 4 miles (S. E. by S.) from Petworth; containing 67 inhabitants. It is bounded on the north by the Rother navigation, and comprises by measurement 346 acres; the surface is diversified, and from the higher grounds, especially from Coates Castle, the views are extensive and strikingly beautiful. The living is consolidated with the rectory of Burton: the tithes have been commuted for £69. 12., and the glebe contains nearly 5 acres. The church is in the early English style.

COATES, a township, in the parish of BARNOLDSWICK, union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 8 miles (W. S. W.) from Skipton; containing 101 inhabitants. The township is situated in a district abounding with limestone of good quality, and comprises by measurement 385 acres, chiefly the property of J. W.

Bagshaw, Esq., and Mrs. Ferrand. The village, which is situated near the parochial church, is neatly built. Coates Hall, a large Elizabethan mansion, now neglected, was formerly the residence of the Bagshaw family.

COATES, GREAT (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (W.) from Great Grimsby; containing 245 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 10. 10., and in the gift of Sir R. Sutton, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £654. 5., and the glebe contains $76\frac{1}{4}$ acres, with a glebe-house.

COATES, LITTLE (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Great Grimsby; containing 40 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 18. 4.; net income, £120; patrons, Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge.

COATES, NORTH (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 11 miles (N.N.E.) from Louth; containing 225 inhabitants. The Louth and Humber canal runs through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster: the tithes have been commuted for £470. 18.; and the glebe contains $\frac{1}{2}$ an acre. The church, which has a tower, consists of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, with a chapel. A national school is supported by subscription. There are some of those wells usually called "blow wells."

COATHAM, EAST, a hamlet, in the parish of KIRK-LEATHAM, union of GUISBOROUGH, E. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Guisborough; containing, with West Coatham, 371 inhabitants. This is a small fishing village near the mouth of the Tees, formerly much resorted to for sea-bathing, but recently eclipsed by the neighbouring town of Redcar: the sands in the neighbourhood are well adapted for the promenade or the carriage, and the prospect is often rendered pleasing from the number of trading vessels sailing in the offing. A school is supported by an income of £47, arising principally from the revenues of Kirk-Leatham school.

COATHAM-MUNDEVILLE, a township, in the parish of HAUGHTON-LE-SKERNE, union of DARLINGTON, S. W. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 4 miles (N.) from Darlington, on the road to Durham; containing 138 inhabitants. The place takes its distinguishing name from the family of Amundeville, to whom it belonged in the first or second century after the Conquest. A chapel dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene existed here at a very early period, and it is probable that it continued for several centuries, it being mentioned so late as the year 1680, when, however, it seems to have been in ruins. The township comprises 1466 acres, of which 771 are arable, 668 grass land, 12 wood, and 15 roads and waste. On the river Skerne is a manufactory for spinning flax and shoe-thread. The Stockton and Darlington railway passes through the township, on its way to the collieries and the Aucklands: the tithes have been commuted for £95. 17., and there is a glebe of 16 acres.

COATHILL, a township, in the parish of WETHERAL, union of CARLISLE, CUMBERLAND ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Carlisle; containing 253 inhabitants. Here is a quarry of gypsum.

COATON, a hamlet, in the parish of RAVENSTHORPE, union of BRIXWORTH, hundred of GUILSBOROUGH, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Northampton; containing 128 inhabitants, and comprising 703 acres. The surface is undulated, partially wooded, and well watered by a branch of the river Nene.

COATON, CLAY (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of RUGBY, hundred of GUILSBOROUGH, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Rugby; containing 107 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 974 acres; the lands are chiefly a rich pasture, and the substratum is a blue clay. The village is situated on each side of a rivulet, which not unfrequently overflows its banks; and the parish is intersected by the Derby and Leicester canal. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10; patron and incumbent, Rev. Thomas Smith, whose tithes have been commuted for £275, and whose glebe comprises 74 acres. The church is an ancient structure, in the early English style.

COATSAMOOR, or COATSAY-MOOR, a township, in the parish of HEIGHINGTON, union of DARLINGTON; S. E. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Darlington; containing 19 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 510 acres: the road from Darlington to Auckland passes on the west, and on the east is the Stockton and Darlington railway.

COAT-YARDS, a township, in the chapelry of NETHER WITTON, union of ROTHBURY, W. division of MORPETH ward, and N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6 miles (S. by E.) from Rothbury; containing 20 inhabitants. The families of Fenwick, Robinson, and Turner have held lands here, the first-named of whom appears to have possessed the place shortly after the Dissolution, when the crown obtained it from the abbey of Newminster. The township comprises by computation 235 acres, and is a bleak unsheltered plain, destitute of wood.

COBHAM (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of NORTH-AYLESFORD, hundred of SHAMWELL, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Gravesend; containing 758 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 2825 acres, of which 1400 are arable; the surface is hilly and well wooded, and the soil, in the greater portion, is a sandy loam, and the remainder a light chalk and sand. The village stands upon an eminence, and is supplied with water from works constructed by the family of Cobham: it had formerly a weekly market on Monday, and a fair on St. Mary Magdalene's-day, granted to John, Lord Cobham, in the 41st of Edward III.; the fair is held on the 2nd of Aug., but the market has been long disused. The living is a vicarage not in charge; net income, £94; patrons, Trustees of the Earl of Darnley, a minor; proprietor, T. Wells, Esq. The church is a handsome structure, in the early and later English styles, with an embattled tower, and a north porch of elegant design; it contains a piscina in a richly canopied niche, and some very ancient monuments and brasses to the noble families of Cobham and Brooke. In 1362, John, Lord Cobham, made it collegiate, and, contiguous to the churchyard, erected a college, which he amply endowed for five chaplains, afterwards increased to eleven: at the suppression it was valued at £128. 1. 2., and was confirmed by the crown to George, Lord Cobham, whose executors, in 1598, built upon its site the present college, and endowed it with the former possessions, for the maintenance of 20 persons. It is a neat quadrangular building of stone, comprising part of the ancient structure. A school for girls is supported by the Countess of Darnley. The course of the Roman Watling-street is visible in the parish; and on a hill in Cobham Park is a splendid mausoleum, of the Doric order, erected by the late Earl of Darnley, at an expense of £15,000. The place confers the title of Baron on the Duke of Buckingham.

COBHAM (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of EPSOM, Second division of the hundred of ELMBRIDGE, W. division of SURREY, 10 miles (N.E.) from Guildford, and 20 (S. W.) from London; containing 1617 inhabitants. It comprises 5193a. 1r. 37p., of which about 2460 acres are arable, 1217 meadow, and nearly 800 wood; and is bounded by the river Mole, which is crossed by a bridge on the road from Portsmouth to London. This river was anciently called the Emley, from which the hundred, properly called Emley-Bridge, evidently took its name; it abounds with pike, trout, perch, and other fish, and its banks are adorned with several elegant villas. The village near the church is called Church-Cobham, about half a mile from which, on the Portsmouth road, is Street-Cobham, where is a post-office. A fair is held on the 11th of December. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 17. 11.; net income, £162; patron, Rev. Charles Weston; impropiators, J. Simkinson, Esq., and others. The church has a handsome Norman arch at the principal south entrance: its walls are built with gravel cemented into a hard mass, at least a yard in thickness, and cased with plaster: on taking down the north wall for the enlargement of the church, in 1826, its foundation was discovered to be scarcely, if at all, lower than the level of the floor inside. A national school is supported by subscription. There is a saline chalybeate spring near the brook which separates the parish on the north from Esher; and a little to the westward of Cobham is a barrow, near which a considerable number of Roman coins of the Lower Empire was ploughed up in 1772.

COBLE-DEAN, a hamlet, in the township of CHIRTON, parish, borough, and union of TYNEMOUTH, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 1 mile westward from North Shields. It is situated on the north bank of the Tyne, and contains a steam flour-mill, a manufactory for whiting, and a raft-yard belonging to Messrs. T. W. Smith and Co., of St. Peter's, Newcastle; and steam tug-boats are built here.

COBLEY, with TUTNAL, a hamlet, in the parish of TARDEBIGG, union of BROMSGROVE, Alcester division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, though locally in the Upper division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, E. division of the county of WORCESTER, 3½ miles (E. by N.) from Bromsgrove; containing 533 inhabitants. The Worcester and Birmingham canal passes near this place.

COBRIDGE, a village, partly in the parish of BURSLEM, and partly in that of STOKE-UPON-TRENT, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 2¾ miles (N. N. E.) from Newcastle. The ancient ville of Rushton, which has been superseded by Cobridge, is described in Domesday book under the name of Risetone; it was given by Henry de Audley to Hulton Abbey, to which it became the grange, and since the Dissolution has been in the possession of the ancient family of Biddulph. Cobridge is in the Staffordshire Potteries, situated midway between Burslem and Hanley, and contains several manufactories and collieries. A neat chapel, affording accommodation to about 300 persons, with a tower of brick, has been lately erected by the rector of Burslem, aided by the Church Commissioners, and the Diocesan Society; and there are a chapel and school belonging to Roman Catholics, and a meeting-house for the New Connexion of Methodists. School-rooms were erected by subscription in 1766.

COCKBURY, a tything, in the parish and union of WINCHCOMBE, Lower division of the hundred of KIFTS-GATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER.

COCKEN, a township, in the parish of HOUGHTON-LE-SPRING, union of CHESTER-LE-STREET, N. division of EASINGTON ward and of the county of DURHAM, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Durham; containing 65 inhabitants. Cocken was separated from the constabulary of West Rainton, and made distinct in 1726. It is situated on the river Wear, and comprises by measurement 380 acres, of which 250 are arable, 120 meadow and pasture, and 10 waste: coal is obtained in the neighbourhood. The manor-house, which is surrounded by beautiful scenery, became, at the commencement of the present century, the residence of a convent of nuns of the order of St. Theresa, who were driven by the revolutionists from their former settlement at Lier, in Flanders. After residing here for upwards of twenty years, they removed to Field House, near Darlington. There is a small national school.

COCKERHAM (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of LANCASTER, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER; containing 3230 inhabitants, of whom 847 are in the township of Cockerham, 5½ miles (N. N. W.) from Garstang. Courts leet and baron are held for the manor, and there is a fair for pedlery on Easter-Monday. The Lancaster and Preston railway passes through the hamlet of Galgate, in the parish, over a viaduct 265 feet in length, 27 feet in width, and 40 feet high, supported on six semicircular arches of 30 feet span; the whole work is handsomely faced with sandstone. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 16. 8.; net income, £655; patron, Lord of the manor. There is an endowment in land, producing £15 per annum, for which children are taught; and two national schools are supported.

COCKERINGTON (ST. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Wold division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4¼ miles (E. N. E.) from Louth; containing 246 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2000 acres, and contains Cockerington Hall, the seat of William Scrope, Esq., a neat mansion, in grounds tastefully laid out. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 1. 5½; net income, £163; patron,

Bishop of Lincoln; appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. The greater portion of the tithes were commuted for land in 1765, and by the recent act, a commutation has been made of the remainder, for a rent-charge of £17; the glebe contains 160 acres. The church is a plain edifice, with a tower, and contains the mausoleum of Sir Adrian Scrope, ancestor of the present family of that name. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. An almshouse for six widows was founded and endowed with £20 per annum, by Sir A. Scrope.

COCKERINGTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Wold division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. E.) from Louth; containing 227 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 1000 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Alvingham: the incumbent receives an annual stipend from the Bishop of Lincoln, who holds about 300 acres of land in the parish, allotted in lieu of tithes in 1765. The church, rebuilt in 1841, is situated in the same churchyard as that of Alvingham, and was formerly the chapel to the abbey of that place. A national school has been built for the joint parishes.

COCKERMOUTH (All Saints), an unincorporated borough, market-town, and parochial chapelry, and the head of a union, in the parish of BRIGHAM, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 25 miles (S. W.) from Carlisle, and 305 (N. W. by N.) from London; containing 4940 inhabitants. The name is derived from the situation of the place at the mouth of the river Cocker, which here unites with the Derwent. The town was taken by surprise, in 1387, by an army of Scottish borderers, who remained here three days. Mary, Queen of Scots, after her escape from the castle of Dunbar, rested some time at Cocker-mouth, on her way from Workington to Carlisle, and was also hospitably entertained at Hutton Hall, then belonging to the Fletchers. During the civil war of the 17th century, the castle was besieged, in August, 1648, by a body of 500 Cumberland royalists, but was relieved on September 29th by Lieut.-Col. Ashton, whom Cromwell had despatched from Lancashire for the purpose. The Castle, formerly the baronial seat of the lords of Allerdale, stands on the edge of a precipitous eminence, on the northern side of the town, opposite the confluence of the two rivers: it was originally of great strength and extent, and is supposed to have been erected by Waldeof, soon after the Conquest, although the remains are not apparently of earlier date than the fourteenth century, and to have been constructed with the materials of an older castle, named Papcastle, a Roman fortress, about a mile and a half distant, on the other side of the Derwent, and the former residence of Waldeof. The only perfect and habitable parts are, the gate-house, with two rooms adjoining, and the court-house at the eastern angle of the area: underneath the ruins of the great tower is a spacious vault, thirty feet square, the roof of which is groined, and supported by an octagonal central pillar, with pilasters at the angles and sides; this vault, from being called Mary Kirk, is supposed to have been the chapel, dedicated to St. Mary. On each side of the gateway is a dungeon, capable of containing 50 prisoners, the entrance to which was probably through a small aperture, visible in the corner of the arch.

The TOWN is situated in a narrow valley, amid scenery richly diversified with hill and dale, wood and water. The Derwent flows on the northern side of it, and is crossed by a handsome stone bridge of two arches, connecting the town with the hamlet of Goat, 270 feet in length, and completed in 1822, at an expense to the county of £3000: on the margin of this river is an agreeable promenade, about a mile in length, terminated at one extremity by lofty well-wooded cliffs, and at the other by the ruins of the castle, and the elevated bowling-green. The river Cocker divides the town into two parts, and is crossed by a bridge of one arch, formerly very narrow, but rebuilt on a wider and improved plan in 1828, at a cost of £2600. The streets have been lighted, but, with the exception of the High-street, which is broad and handsome, are only indifferently paved: there is an ample supply of water from the rivers Derwent and Cocker, from some other streams that flow through the town, and from pumps attached to most of the dwellings: the houses are in general built of stone, roofed with blue slate, and of respectable appearance. Considerable improvement has lately been effected, particularly in the erection and widening of the bridges, and in the market-place, above the bridge over the Cocker. There is a small subscription library; also a parochial library over the grammar school, founded by Dr. Bray and his associates, and containing upwards of 500 volumes, to which Dr. Keene, Bishop of Chester, was a great benefactor.

Cockermouth is a place of considerable trading importance, enjoying, within a very limited distance, the advantage of three sea-ports. A great trade is carried on in cotton, linen, and woollen articles, for which there are some extensive manufactories; also in the tanning and dressing of leather, and the manufacture of hats, stockings, paper, &c.; and in the vicinity are coal-mines. The moor, containing about 1200 acres, was inclosed and divided under an act obtained in 1813. The market is on Monday, when a considerable quantity of grain is pitched in the market-place; and on Saturday is a market for provisions, &c. Fairs for cattle are held on every alternate Wednesday from the beginning of May till the end of Sept.; and there is a great fair for horses and horned-cattle on the 10th of Oct.; also two great fairs, or statutes, for hiring servants, on the Mondays at Whitsuntide and Martinmas. The town has no separate jurisdiction: the chief officer is a bailiff, who is chosen at Michaelmas, at the court leet for the manor, from among the burghers, by a jury of burghers, appointed for regulating the affairs of the town; he acts as clerk of the market, but exercises no magisterial functions, and has no local authority. In the 23rd of Edward I. the borough returned members to parliament, but from that date till the 16th of Charles I. the elective franchise was suspended; it was then restored by a resolution of the house of commons, and from that period has been exercised without intermission. The right of voting for the two members was formerly vested in the burgage tenants, about 300 in number, but, by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, was extended to the £10 householders of an enlarged district, which for elective purposes was incorporated with the ancient borough: the old borough comprises 3000 acres, and the boundaries of the new contain 9500: the bailiff is returning officer. The county magistrates exercise jurisdiction within the borough, and hold a petty-session every Monday. The steward of the manor holds a court every three weeks, for the recovery of debts under 40s., and a court leet at Michaelmas and Easter; and, aided by commissioners appointed for the government of the several manors comprised within the honour, he also holds, at Christmas, a court of dimissions in the castle. The Epiphany quarter-session for the county is held here in January; and Cockermouth is the principal place of election for the eastern division of the county. The Moot-hall, formerly an old dilapidated structure, inconveniently situated in the market-place, has been rebuilt in a more commodious manner, and on a more eligible site. There is a small house of correction in St. Helen's street.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy; net income, £132; patron, Earl of Lonsdale. The tithes of the chapelry were commuted for land in 1813, and under the recent act, for a rent-charge of £150; the glebe contains 5 acres. The old church, or chapel, erected in the reign of Edward III., was taken down, with the exception of the tower, and the present edifice of freestone built by means of a brief, in 1711, and dedicated to All Saints; it was enlarged in 1825, towards the expense of which the Incorporated Society contributed £175. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans. The free grammar school was founded in 1676, by Lord Wharton, Sir Richard Graham, and others, the income being £24 per annum. Other schools are supported by subscription, and the poor have the produce of several benefactions that have been left for their benefit. The union of Cockermouth comprises forty-seven parishes or places, and contains a population of 35,676. The hills on each side of the Derwent are interesting to the naturalist, consisting of calcareous stone, almost entirely composed of shells of the genus ammonia. On the north side of the town is a tumulus, called Toot-hill; and one mile westward are the rampart and ditch of a fort, or encampment, triangular in form, and nearly 750 feet in circumference. William Wordsworth, the eminent poet and laureate, was born here in 1770. The honour of Cockermouth confers the title of Baron on the family of Wyndham, Earls of Egremont.

COCKERSAND-ABBEY, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 7 miles (S. W. by S.) from Lancaster. This place was originally a hermitage, then an hospital, dedicated to St. Mary, for a prior and several infirm brethren; it was endowed by William of Lancaster, in the time of Henry III., and was subordinate to the abbey of Leicester, but, about the year 1196, it was changed into an abbey of Præmonstratensian canons. By favour of the crown it survived, for a short time, the general dissolution, when it consisted of twenty-one religious and fifty-seven servants, and was valued at £282. 7. 7. per annum. The principal relic is an octagonal chapter-house.

COCKERTON, a township, in the parish and union of DARLINGTON, S. E. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 1¼ mile (N. W. by N.) from Darlington; containing 482 inhabitants. The soil, which is loamy, is in general good. Thomas Robinson, Esq., has a handsome residence here. The village is neatly built; its inhabitants were formerly employed in the linen manufacture, but the trade has been removed to Barnsley. Divine service is performed every Wednesday, by permission of the bishop, in the national schoolroom, built in 1825; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A gold, and several copper coins were found in a large stone jar, in the beck, in 1836.

COCKEY, a hamlet, in the chapelry of AINSWORTH, parish of MIDDLETON, union of OLDHAM, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3¼ miles (W. by S.) from Bury. In the village of Cockey-Moor is a place of worship for Unitarians.

COCKFIELD, a parish, in the union of TEESDALE, S. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 12 miles (N. W. by W.) from Darlington; containing, with the township of Woodland, 944 inhabitants. This parish, situated on two hills divided by Hamsterley parish, comprises 4416a. 20p., whereof 400 acres form a common of uninclosed land; the soil is clay, with a substratum of freestone of a most excellent and durable quality, the ancient church of Darlington, which was built with it, being still in high preservation. The great basaltic dyke, bisecting a dyke of earlier formation, runs through the parish; and there is coal, of which the mines, though they have been wrought for nearly five centuries, are even now slightly productive. An extension of the Stockton and Darlington railway, from St. Helen's station to Cockfield, is of great convenience for the transport of produce. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Staindrop lately annexed, valued in the king's books at £9. 18., and in the gift of the Duke of Cleveland: the tithes have been commuted for £220, and the glebe consists of 16 acres, with a house. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school, built by the freeholders, is attended by pay scholars. On Cockfield Fell are traces of ancient intrenchments. This was the birthplace of the ingenious Jeremiah and George Dixon, of whom the former, more particularly, was employed in numerous scientific investigations of importance.

COCKFIELD (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of COSFORD, hundred of BABERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, 4¼ miles (N. by W.) from Lavenham; containing 951 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £30, and in the patronage of St. John's College, Cambridge; net income, £635. The church has a large and handsome tower.

COCKHILL, a hamlet, in the parish of CASTLE-CARY, hundred of CATSASH, E. division of SOMERSET; containing, with the hamlet of Dimmer, 116 inhabitants.

COCKING, a parish, in the union of MIDHURST, hundred of EASEBOURNE, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, 2½ miles (S.) from Midhurst; containing 464 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from London, through Midhurst, to Chichester, and comprises a portion of the Downs. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. The church is in the early English style, with some later additions. In 1730, Stephen Challen bequeathed messuages for the education of children; but the rental is now only £4 a year.

COCKINGTON, a parish, in the union of NEWTON-ABBOT, hundred of HAYTOR, Paignton and S. divisions of DEVON, 2½ miles (W.) from Torbay; containing 203 inhabitants. This place is of considerable antiquity, and appears to have obtained a degree of importance at an early period; in 1297, the inhabitants received the grant of a market and a fair, both which have long been discontinued. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Tor-Mohun; impropiator, Rev. Roger Mallock. The church contains an octagonal font and a wooden screen. Queen Elizabeth leased the rectory of Tor-Mohun, and the church of Cockington, to Sir George Cary, who, in 1609, erected almshouses here for seven persons, with an endowment of £30 per annum.

COCKLAW, or COCKLEY, a township, in the parish of ST. JOHN-LEE, union of HEXHAM, S. division of TINDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Hexham; containing 172 inhabitants. It is chiefly distinguished for its strong old fortress, called Cocklaw, or Cockley Tower, in 1567 the principal seat of the family of Errington, who derived their name from a small hamlet on the Erring burn, where they were seated in 1372. The township extends from the North Tyne along the eastern side of the burn, and the Roman Watling-street passes on the east a small distance from the village. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £224.

COCKLE PARK, a township, in the parochial chapelry of HEBBURN, union of MORPETH, W. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 4 miles (N.) from Morpeth; containing 53 inhabitants. Cockle Park Tower, now occupied as a farm-house, was built about the year 1460, and was once a stronghold of the Ogles, but additions have been made since that date, and there is a tradition that the southern part of the building was destroyed by fire some five centuries since; its situation is exposed, and a very extensive prospect may be obtained from it, especially over the sea. It is probable, however, that there was a manor-house here prior to the erection of the tower, as "William of Cookperce" was one of the twelve English knights appointed in 1241 to sit with twelve Scottish ones, to make laws for the regulation of the marches between the two kingdoms; and the Lawson copy of the aid granted to Henry III. to knight his eldest son, makes "Cockelpke" one of the manors of the Bothal barony. The township comprises about 1300 acres of land, which are free from tithe.

COCKLEY-CLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of SWAFFHAM, hundred of SOUTH GREENHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Swaffham; containing 244 inhabitants. It comprises 4413*a.* 1*r.* 10*p.*, of which 2648 acres are arable, 1631 meadow and pasture, and 134 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of St. Peter consolidated, valued in the king's books at £8. 17. 1., and in the patronage of J. R. Buckworth, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £180, and the glebe comprises 107 acres. The church is in the decorated English style, with a circular tower. A school is supported by the patron and rector. There was formerly a church dedicated to St. Peter, which has been demolished; and a chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, has been converted into the parsonage-house.

COCKSHUT, a chapelry, in the parish and union of ELLESMERE, hundred of PIMHILL, N. division of SALOP, 4 miles (S. E. by S.) from Ellesmere. This place is situated on the road from Shrewsbury to Chester; two fairs have recently been established for agricultural produce. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £86, and is in the gift of the Vicar of Ellesmere; the impropriation belongs to the Countess of Bridgewater and others. The chapel is dedicated to St. Helen. A school is supported by subscription.

COCKTHORPE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of NORTH GREENHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (E. S. E.) from Wells; containing 42 inhabitants. It comprises 514*a.* 31*p.*, nearly all arable. The living is a rectory, with that of Blake-ney, the vicarage of Little Langham, and the perpetual curacy of Glandford united, valued in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of Lord Calthorpe: the tithes have been commuted for £143. 11. 1., and the glebe consists of 26 acres. The church, which is chiefly in the early style, was repewed in 1839, and contains a handsome sculptured font. At this place, now comprising only three or four houses, Admiral Sir Cloudesley Shovel, Sir John Narborough, and Sir Christopher Mynnes, were born.

COCKTHORPE, a chapelry, in the parish of DUCKLINGTON, union of WITNEY, hundred of BAMPFON, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Witney. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary.

CODDENHAM (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Needham-Market; containing 924, and with the chapelry of Crowfield, 1309 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from London, through Ipswich, to Norwich, and bounded on the south-west by the Stow-Market and Ipswich navigation; it comprises 2585*a.* 3*r.*, of which 1721*a.* 1*r.* 10*p.*, are in Crowfield, and contains some extensive chalk-pits. Petty-sessions are held monthly. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, with Crowfield annexed, and valued in the king's books at £12. 0. 5.; patron, Rev. J. Longe: the tithes have been commuted for £637. 7. 6., and the glebe contains nearly 29 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a handsome structure, in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower at the west end of the north aisle; the east window of the chancel is embellished with stained glass, the gift of the late Rev. R. Longe. The Rev. Balthazar Gardemau, vicar, vested the impropriation in trustees for the use of the vicar for ever; and, in 1758, his widow, Lady Catherine, erected a commodious school-house, with an endowment in land now producing a rental of £70 per annum. A school is also supported by the vicar.

CODDINGTON (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER; comprising the townships of Alderley, Chowley, and Coddington; and containing 324 inhabitants, of whom 109 are in the township of Coddington, 2 miles (S. S. W.) from Handley. This place is supposed to have been a habitation of the Britons. In 1093, it appears to have been in the possession of two brothers, Hugh and Ralph, the former of whom was Baron of Hawarden, and the earl's chamberlain, and the latter his chief butler, who afterwards took the name of Botiler. In the 31st of Edward III., Hawiss, widow of Ralph Botiler, claimed to have a market here every Monday, and a fair on the eve and festival of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross. The parish comprises 2957*a.* 1*r.* 5*p.*, about one-third of which is arable. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 4. 2.; net income, £262; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Chester. The church is an ancient structure, with a wooden belfry, supposed to have been founded in the eleventh century; it was granted, with the living, to Chester Abbey, by Fitz-Hugh, and was one of the few possessions remaining to the abbey that were confirmed to the Dean and Chapter by Queen Elizabeth. In the middle of a field, called the Mudd-field, is a tumulus of uncertain origin, which has never been opened: iron bits of a very large size have been found in a corner of the same field, and a causeway has been traced under ground. John Stone, rector of this parish, and sacrist of the Cathedral of Chester, brought hither the communion plate of that cathedral, and buried it in the church, underneath a seat in the chancel, during the rebellion in 1745.

CODDINGTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of LEDBURY, hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, 3 miles (N.) from Ledbury; containing 158 inhabitants, and consisting of 1064 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford: the tithes have been commuted for £180, and the glebe comprises 34 acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

CODDINGTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, S. division of the wapentake of NEWARK and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Newark; containing 436 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1500 acres: limestone is quarried for building and for burning into lime. The living is annexed, with that of Syerston, to the vicarage of East Stoke: the tithes were commuted for land in 1760. The church is a small structure, principally in the early and decorated English styles. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Joseph Birch, in 1738, bequeathed 98*a.* 2*r.* 8*p.* of land, part of the proceeds of which is paid to a master for teaching children, and the remainder distributed among the poor.

CODFORD (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of WARMINSTER, hundred of HEYTESBURY, Warminster and S. divisions of WILTS, 2 miles (N. W.) from Wily; containing 338 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the river Wily, and the road from Bristol to Portsmouth, comprises by estimation 2000 acres; the soil is chalk, of which there are some pits, whence are taken materials for building cottages, and for the roads. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18, and in the patronage of St. John's College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £345, and the glebe, including a portion of downland, comprises about 95 acres. The church is a very ancient structure, supposed to have been built anterior to the Conquest, and has a Norman arch, surmounting one of plainer character, thought to be of Saxon architecture. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a schoolroom has been built by subscription, aided by a grant of £25 from the National Society. There are the remains of a British camp.

CODFORD (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of WARMINSTER, hundred of HEYTESBURY, Warminster and S. divisions of WILTS, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Heytesbury; containing, with the township of Ashton-Gifford, 394 inhabitants, and consisting of 1614 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 15.;

net income, £380; patrons, Master and Fellows of Pembroke College, Oxford: the glebe comprises about 8 acres. A school is supported by Wadham Locke, Esq., of Ashton-Gifford House, at whose expense the premises were erected.

CODICOTE (ST. GILES), a parish, in the union of HITCHIN, hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of ST. ALBAN'S, though locally in the hundred of BROADWATER, county of HERTFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. N. W.) from Welwyn; containing 906 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the London and Bedford road, and comprises 2433 acres; the soil is gravel, alternated with clay. Many females are occupied in making straw-plat for hats and bonnets. There was formerly a chartered market on Friday, and a fair on St. James'-day, both of which are discontinued; but a small market for the sale of straw-plat is held on Thursday, and there is a pleasure-fair on Whit-Monday. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 5. 10., and in the gift of the Bishop of Ely: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £150, and tithes belonging to the bishop for £500, with a glebe of 30 acres. The church is a small building, with a chapel attached, and has an embattled tower, surmounted by a spire. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A national school for girls is supported by two ladies; and about £10 per annum, derived from land, are distributed to the poor at Christmas. On Codicote heath are the remains of a Roman fortification.

CODNOR, with Loscow, a township, in the parish of HEANOR, union of BASFORD, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Alfreton; containing 1738 inhabitants, of whom 1314 are in Codnor.

CODNOR-CASTLE, an extra-parochial district, in the union of BASFORD, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Alfreton; containing, with the Park liberty, 815 inhabitants. Here was an ancient castle belonging to the noble family of Grey, styled lords Grey of Codnor, the last of whom, Henry, a philosopher and alchemist in the reign of Edward IV., obtained a license to practise the transmutation of metals. The Cromford canal passes on the east side of this district, where there are extensive iron-works; and a railway on the south communicates with the collieries in the neighbourhood.

CODRINGTON, a tything, in the parish of WAPLEY, union of CHIPPING-SODBURY, Lower division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S-ASH, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Chipping-Sodbury.

CODSALL (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union, and S. division of the hundred, of SEISDON, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 5 miles (N. W.) from Wolverhampton; containing, with the township of Oaken, 1096 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2869 acres, about one-third of which is pasture, and the rest arable, and is intersected by the road from London to Shrewsbury: stone is quarried for building. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £146; patron, Lord Wrottesley; improPRIATOR, Duke of Sutherland. The chancel of the church contains a monument, erected in 1630, on which rests a recumbent effigy of Walter Wrottesley. A school was founded in 1716, by Dorothy Derby.

COEDKERNEW (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and division of NEWPORT, hundred of WENTLOOG, county of MONMOUTH, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Newport; containing 149 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 600 acres; the surface is hilly and undulated. The living is united to the vicarage of St. Bride's, Wentloog.

COFFINSWELL (ST. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of NEWTON-ABBOT, hundred of HAYTOR, Teignbridge and S. divisions of DEVON, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Newton-Bushell; containing 215 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of St. Mary-Church: the Dean and Chapter of Exeter receive a tithe rent-charge of £133, and the incumbent one of £105.

COGENHOE (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of HARDINGSTONE, hundred of WYMMERSLEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Northampton; containing 322 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Nene, and comprises by computation 945 acres: limestone of excellent quality is quarried, both for building and burning into lime. The village is pleasantly seated on an eminence rising from the bank of the river, and commands some pleasing views. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17; net income, £245; patron and incumbent, Rev. R. E. Watkins. The church is a handsome edifice, chiefly in the early English style, with portions of a later date, and contains a mutilated monument to the founder, bearing his effigy in a recumbent posture, and cross-legged. Miss Linwood, whose celebrated exhibition of worsted needle-work in London has been much patronised by the public, was born here.

COGGES (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of WITNEY, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. E. by E.) from Witney; containing 757 inhabitants. Some of the family of Arsic, who were lords of the barony, founded here an alien priory of Black monks, subordinate to the abbey of Fescamp, in Normandy: after the dissolution of foreign cells its possessions were granted by Henry VI. to Eton College. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £64; patrons and impropiators, Provost and Fellows of the College. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1787. The church is an ancient edifice, with a tower having a pyramidal roof: the north aisle is ornamented with rich mouldings, and grotesque figures playing on musical instruments; and between it and the chancel is a handsome altar-tomb. In 1695, William Blake, Esq., bequeathed land producing about £50 per annum, chiefly for instruction. To the south of the church, on a spot called Castle Yard, foundations, supposed to be those of a castle, are frequently dug up; and at Wilcot, in the parish, is an old chapel, in which are the arms of the family of Pope, and a mural tablet to the memory of John Price, keeper of the Bodleian library at Oxford.

COGGESHALL, GREAT (ST. PETER), a market-town and parish, in the union of WITHAM, Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, N. division of ESSEX, 3 miles (N.) from Kelvedon, and 44 (N. E.) from London; containing 3408 inhabitants. This place is supposed by some to have been the Roman station Ad Ansam, and by others the Canonium of Antoninus, with the distance of which latter from Cesaromagus its situation precisely corresponds; and numerous vestiges of Roman antiquity have been discovered. The present town appears to have risen from the establishment of an abbey, in 1142, by King Stephen and his Queen Matilda, for monks of the Cistercian order, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, to the abbot and monks of which King John granted several privileges, including, probably, the power of life and death, as is inferred from the ancient name of one of the streets, still by some called Gallows-street. Henry III. granted them free warren, a weekly market, and an annual fair for eight days. The revenue of the abbey at the Dissolution was £298. 8. : the remains, which exhibit specimens of early English architecture, are now occupied as a farmhouse; the exterior has lancet-shaped windows in good preservation, and in the interior are some good windows and vaulted and groined roofs. Near the abbey is an ancient bridge of three arches, built by Stephen, over a canal cut for conveying water from the river to the monastery. The town is situated near the river Blackwater, from which it rises gradually to a considerable elevation, and consists of several narrow streets; it was lighted with gas in 1837, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from springs in the neighbourhood. The manufacture of baize and serge, formerly extensive, is now extinct; the principal branch of trade is silk-weaving, which has been established within the last 25 years. In 1838, Mr. John Hall erected a silk-throwing mill, capable of employing 500 persons. Messrs. Westmacott and Co. have 100 looms at work weaving broad silks and velvets; and, in 1826, Mr. Bankes commenced the tambour work on lace-net, in which about 300 females are engaged, and in 1838 introduced a number of machines for weaving lace-net. An extensive iron-foundry and steam flour-mill has been erected by Charles Newman, Esq. The place is noted for its vegetables and garden seeds, which are abundant. The market is on Thursday: the market-place is spacious, and contained an old cross, which was taken down in 1787. A fair for cattle and pedlery is held on Whit-Tuesday.

Coggeshall anciently comprised the parishes of Great and Little Coggeshall, at present consolidated: in the latter, which is now only a hamlet, were two churches, built by the monks; one for their own use, which has been entirely demolished, and the other for a parochial church, whereof the remains have been converted into a barn. The parish comprises by computation 2300 acres, 300 of which are woodland; the soil is various, in some parts a strong loam resting on a clay bottom, in others a stiff wet loam on a whitish marl, and in the neighbourhood of the town a rich deep loam of great fertility. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 3. 4.; net income, £215; patron, Peter Du Cane, Esq., lord of the manor; impropiators, Charles Skingley, Esq., and Mrs. Caswell. The church is a spacious handsome structure, in the later English style, with a large square tower; the aisles are embattled, and strengthened with empanelled buttresses; the interior contains several ancient monuments. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans. A school, under the direction of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, was founded, in 1636, by Sir Robert Hitcham, Knt., who bequeathed land producing £300 per annum. There is a national school for boys, and a Lancasterian school is supported by subscription. There are six unendowed almshouses; and among the charitable bequests for the benefit of the poor, are one now amounting to £58 per annum, given by Thomas Paycocke, Esq., in 1580, and one of £20 per annum, charged on an estate, the gift of Sir Mark Guyon, Knt., which, with £15 per annum payable out of the rectory of East Tilbury, is distributed in bread every Sunday. Silver and copper coins of Ethelwulph, and a massive gold ring, were dug up on the Highfields estate.

COGGESHALL, LITTLE, a hamlet, in the parish of GREAT COGGESHALL, union and hundred of WITHAM, N. division of ESSEX, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (S.) from Great Coggeshall; containing 443 inhabitants. This place is separated from the town by the river Blackwater, over which are three bridges affording communication; one of them, called the Long Bridge, is near the site of the ancient abbey, and was built in the reign of Stephen.—See COGGESHALL, GREAT.

COGSALL, a township, in the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH, union of NORTHWICH, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Northwich; containing 108 inhabitants. Tradition reports, that on a steep sandy eminence, called Butter Hill, the market people from the hundred of Wirral deposited their butter and other produce when the plague excluded them from the market-place at Chester.

COKER, EAST (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of YEOVIL, hundred of HOUNSBOROUGH, BARWICK, and COKER, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Yeovil; containing, with North Coker, 1334 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 2081 acres. Nearly one-half of the population is employed in making sail-cloth, which is carried on to a great extent; and limestone, and stone for building and for the roads, are quarried. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 6. 3.; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Exeter; improprator, W. Helyar, Esq., as lessee under the Dean and Chapter. The rectorial tithes have been commuted for £335, and the vicarial for £267. 10.; the glebe comprises 7 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a neat cruciform edifice, with a central tower. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and a school is supported by subscription. The foundations of a Roman building were discovered in a field in 1753; one of the rooms had a beautiful tessellated pavement, representing persons lying on a couch, beneath which were found a hypocaust, several coffins, burnt bones, &c. There are remains of an ancient abbey, called Nash Abbey, in the parish, supposed to have been an appendage to that of Montacute. Dampier, the celebrated circumnavigator, was born here in 1652.

COKER, NORTH, a hamlet (formerly a chapelry), in the parish of EAST COKER, union of YEOVIL, hundred of HOUNSBOROUGH, BARWICK, and COKER, W. division of SOMERSET, 2 miles (S. S. W.) from Yeovil. The chapel has been demolished, and a workhouse erected on its site.

COKER, WEST (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of YEOVIL, hundred of HOUNSBOROUGH, BARWICK, and COKER, W. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W. from Yeovil; containing 1046 inhabitants, and consisting of about 1300 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 19. 7.; patron and incumbent, Rev. George Jekyll: the tithes have been commuted for £425, and the glebe comprises 17 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church has been enlarged, by the addition of 316 sittings. There is a school, endowed with the interest of a bequest of £100; and almshouses for five persons were founded about 1719, pursuant to the will of William Ruddock.

COLAN (St. COLAN), a parish, in the union of ST. COLUMB-MAJOR, hundred of PYDER, E. division of CORNWALL, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from St. Columb-Major; containing 217 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 1600 acres. The barton of Colan belonged to the ancient family of Colan, or St. Colan, whose last heir-male, about the year 1500, left two daughters, the elder married to one of the Blewetts, of Holcombe-Rogus, in Devonshire, and the other to a member of the family of Trefusis. The Blewetts resided here for several generations, and one of the family, Major Colan Blewett, distinguished himself as an active officer under Charles I., and is said to have had four brothers engaged in the same service. The parish contains the villages of Bezoan, Melancoose, and Mountjoy. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £163; patron, Bishop of Exeter; improprator of the remainder of the rectorial tithes, Sir R. Vyvyan, Bart. The church contains a monument to the memory of Thomas and Elizabeth Blewett, with a brass plate, on which their effigies, and those of their thirteen sons and eleven daughters, are engraved. There are two places of worship for Wesleyans. In the parish is a celebrated spring, called Our Lady of Nantz' Well.

COLBOURNE, a township, in the parish of CATTERICK, union of RICHMOND, wapentake of HANG-EAST, N. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Richmond; containing 142 inhabitants. This place, which derives its name from a stream, or burn, that falls into the river Swale a little below the village, comprises by computation 1240 acres of land. The ancient Hall, now a farm-house, was a seat of the D'Arcy family; and near it are the remains of a Roman Catholic chapel, which was dedicated to St. Ann.

COLBY (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of AYLHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Aylsham; containing 346 inhabitants. It comprises 1115a. 1r. 18p., of which about 868 acres are arable, 177 pasture and meadow, and nearly 28 wood and plantation. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 15. 10., and in the gift of Lord Suffield: the tithes have been commuted for £360, and the glebe contains 7a. 27p., to which is attached a glebe-house. The church had formerly a north aisle, which was taken down in 1748, when the church was thoroughly repaired; the font is elaborately sculptured, and to the south side of the chancel is attached a beautiful piscina. Thomas de Colby, D.D., Bishop of Lismore and Waterford, who died in 1460, was a native of the parish.

COLBY, a township, in the parish of ST. LAWRENCE, APPLEBY, EAST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. by N.) from Appleby; containing 156 inhabitants. The village is situated on an eminence, at the base of which flows the river Eden.

Arms.

COLCHESTER, a borough and market-town, having separate jurisdiction, and the head of a union, locally in the Colchester division of the hundred of LEXDEN, N. division of ESSEX, 22 miles (N. E. by E.) from Chelmsford, and 51 (N. E. by E.) from London; containing 17,790 inhabitants, including the parishes of Bere-Church, Greenstead, Lexden, and Mile-End, all within the liberties. The name of this place, which by some antiquaries is supposed to have been the Camalodunum of the Romans, is derived either from its having been one of the Coloniae established by that people in Britain, or from its situation on the river Colne. It was called by the Britons Caer Colun, and appears to have been a town of considerable importance prior to the invasion of the Romans, who, according to Tacitus and other historians, having, under the conduct of Claudius, subdued the Trinobantes and taken possession of this town, garrisoned it with the second, ninth, and fourteenth legions, styled by him the conquerors of Britain. The Roman name of the place is said to have been derived from an altar dedicated to Mars, under the name of Camulus, by which also that divinity is designated on some coins, still extant, of Cunobeline, King of the Trinobantes, who, prior to the conquest by the Romans, had his residence here. Claudius, having reduced the adjacent country to a Roman province, appointed Platius his propraetor, and returned in triumph to Rome. After his departure, Boadicea, queen of the Iceni, taking advantage of the absence of part of the Roman legions, attacked Camalodunum, which after a feeble resistance, she entirely demolished; but, according to Pliny, and the evidence of Roman coins and other ancient inscriptions, it appears to have been soon rebuilt with increased splendour, and to have been adorned with public edifices, a temple to Claudius, a triumphal arch, and a statue to the Goddess of Victory; and Constantine the Great is traditionally said to have been born in the city, which continued to flourish as a principal station of the Romans till their final departure from Britain. The Saxons, by whom it was afterwards occupied, gave it the name of Colne-cestre, and it retained its consequence as a place of strength for a considerable time, but began to decline in proportion as London rose into importance. On the irruption of the Danes, it became a principal residence of that people, who, by treaty with Alfred, were established in the city and country adjacent; but re-commencing their barbarous system of plunder and devastation, Edward the Elder, in 921, took the town by assault, and putting them all to the sword, re-peopled it with West-Saxons. According to the Saxon Chronicles, he repaired the walls in 922, at which time he is stated to have erected the castle, now falling to decay, but the remains of that edifice are evidently of Norman character. Colchester was a considerable town at the time of the Norman survey, but suffered greatly in the wars of the succeeding reigns. During the turbulent reign of John, Saher de Quincy, Earl of Winchester, having assembled an army of foreigners, laid siege to the place in 1215; but, on the approach of the barons, who were advancing from London to its relief, he drew off his forces and retired to Bury-St. Edmund's: he afterwards got possession of the town, and, having plundered it, left a garrison in the castle, which, having been invested by the king, was compelled to surrender. It was subsequently besieged and taken by the troops of Prince Louis, whom the barons had invited into England to their assistance, and who, thinking the opportunity favourable for conquest, kept possession of it for himself, and hoisted the banner of France upon its walls; but the barons, having submitted to their new sovereign, Henry III., retook the castle from the prince, and expelled him from the kingdom. In the reign of Edward III., the town contributed 5 ships and 170 mariners towards the naval armament for the blockade of Calais. The inhabitants, during the attempt to raise Lady Jane Grey to the throne, stedfastly adhered to the interests of Mary, whose cause they supported with so much zeal, that, very soon after her accession, that queen visited the town, for the express purpose of testifying her gratitude: her majesty was received with every public demonstration of joy, and, on her departure, was presented with a silver cup, and £20 in gold. During her reign, many of the Protestant inhabitants were put to death on account of their religious tenets. In 1648, the inhabitants, who had, during the contest between the king and the parliament, generally espoused the cause of the latter, for whose support they had raised considerable supplies of money, finding it necessary to restrain its inordinate power, formed an alliance with the royalists, who, being closely pressed by the parliamentarians, took up their station in the town, into which they were admitted by the inhabitants by treaty. The town was soon afterwards besieged by the parliamentary army under Fairfax, who had been joined on his march by Col. Whaley and Sir Thomas Honeywood, with 2000 horse and foot, and after a close blockade for eleven weeks, during which period it was gallantly defended by the Earl of Norwich, Lord Capel, Sir Charles Lucas, and Sir George Lisle, the garrison, reduced to the extremity of want and suffering, surrendered to Fairfax, when Sir Charles Lucas and Sir George Lisle were shot under the castle walls.

The town is built on the summit and northern acclivity of an eminence rising gently from the river Colne, over which are three bridges, and occupies a quadrilateral area inclosed by the ancient walls, within which the houses to the south and south-east are irregularly disposed: the streets are spacious, and the High-street contains many excellent houses; the town is well paved, lighted with gas, and supplied with water by an engine worked by steam. The theatre, a neat and commodious edifice, erected in 1812, is opened annually by the Norwich company of comedians. A botanical society was instituted in 1823; and there is a medical society, established in 1774. The barracks, with a park of artillery, were capable of accommodating 10,000 troops; but since the conclusion of the war they have been taken down. The woollen-manufacture appears to have been carried on so early as the reign of Edward III.; but the weaving of baizes, for which it was afterwards distinguished, was probably introduced by the Flemings: in the reign of Elizabeth, and at that time employed a considerable number of the inhabitants. This manufacture was subject to certain regulations prescribed by the Baize-hall; but it has been transferred to other towns. A large silk-throwing mill, established in 1825, affords occupation to about 300 hands; and there is a distillery, employing about 50 men; also a rectifying house. The oyster fishery on the river Colne, granted to the free burgesses by Richard I., confirmed by subsequent charters, and for the preservation of which courts of admiralty were and are still occasionally held at Mersea Stone, about 8 miles from the borough, but now generally at the Moot-hall, affords employment to about 600 licensed dredgemen; and numerous smacks are engaged in conveying to London the oysters, for which there is a very great demand, especially for those of Pyfleet, which are found in a small creek, and are remarkable for their goodness and flavour: the river is navigable to the suburb called the Hythe, where are a spacious quay and a custom-house. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday, the latter being the principal for corn and provisions, and also a large mart for cattle and sheep: the market-place is on the north side of the High-street, and is commodiously arranged. The corn-exchange, erected a few years since, is a handsome building, supported on columns. The fairs are on July 5th and the following day; July 23rd and two following days, for cattle; and Oct. 20th for cattle, and the three following days for general merchandise.

This is supposed to be a BOROUGH by prescription: it was first incorporated in 1189, by charter of Richard I., who conferred on the inhabitants many valuable privileges, which were confirmed by succeeding sovereigns, and extended by Henry V.: the charter having been forfeited on several occasions, was renewed by George III. in 1818. By the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, the corporation now consists of a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors; and the borough is divided into three wards, the municipal and parliamentary boundaries being co-extensive. The mayor for the time being, and for the previous year, are justices by virtue of office; and there are seven others. The borough first exercised the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it has, with occasional intermissions, returned two members to parliament. The right of election was formerly vested in the free burgesses generally, whose number was about 1400; but by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, non-resident burgesses, except within seven miles, were disfranchised, and the privilege was extended to the £10 householders of the borough, the limits of which comprise 11,055 acres. The mayor is returning officer. The recorder presides at quarterly courts of session for the borough and liberties, together extending over sixteen parishes; and the mayor and recorder hold two courts of pleas for the recovery of debts to any amount, the jurisdiction of which was extended by Edward IV. to the adjoining parishes of Bere-Church, Greenstead, Lexden, and Mile-End: these courts are held at stated periods; one, styled the Law Hundred, for actions against free burgesses, is on Monday; and the other, called the Foreign Court, for actions against strangers or non-freemen, is on Thursday. The petty-sessions for the division are also held in the town, every Saturday. The Moot-hall is an ancient edifice, originally erected by Eudo Dapifer; underneath is the town gaol.

Colchester, upon very disputed authority, is supposed to have been the seat of a diocese in the early period of Christianity in Britain: Henry VIII. made it the seat of a suffragan bishop, and two bishops were successively consecrated. The town comprises within the walls the twelve PARISHES of All Saints, containing 492 inhabitants; St. James, 1603; St. Martin, 937; St. Mary-at-the-Walls, 1272; St. Nicholas, 1087; St. Peter, 1916; St. Runwald, 444; the Holy Trinity, 768; St. Botolph, 3003; St. Giles, 1987; St. Leonard, or the Hythe, 1119; and St. Mary Magdalen, 365; and four parishes without the walls, namely, Lexden, Bere-Church, Mile-End, and Greenstead, which are considered as part of the town, but are described under their respective heads. The living of All Saints' is a rectory not in charge, with a net income of £291, and is in the gift of Balliol College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £35. The church, erected in the year 1309, near the east gate of the monastery of Grey friars, which had been founded by Robert Fitzwalter in that year, consists of a nave, north aisle, and chancel, with a handsome tower of flint and stone; the south wall, though now covered with cement, is of Roman bricks laid in the herring-bone style. The living of St. James' is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £98. The church is a spacious structure, built prior to the reign of Edward II.; it consists of a nave, north and south aisles, and a chancel, with a tower of Roman brick and stone, and has a fine altar-piece representing the Adoration of the Shepherds. The living of St. Martin's is a discharged rectory, valued at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £72: the patronage is in dispute. The church, which was much damaged during the siege of the town in 1648, was repaired in 1841, when 50 free sittings were added; the steeple, built with Roman bricks, is in a ruinous state. The living of St. Mary's-at-the-Walls is a rectory, valued at £10; net income, £212; patron, Bishop of London. The church was rebuilt in 1713, with the exception of the ancient steeple, which, becoming ruinous, was repaired in 1729; it contains some ancient monuments: the churchyard is surrounded with avenues of lime-trees, and is much frequented as a promenade. The living of St. Nicholas' is a discharged rectory, valued at £10; net income, £92; patrons, Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford. The church is ancient; the tower some years since fell down upon the nave and chancel, the latter of which is still in a ruinous state. The chapel of St. Helen, in this parish, rebuilt by Eudo in 1076, was lately used as a place of worship by the Society of Friends, and now for a Sunday school. The living of St. Peter's is a discharged vicarage, valued at £10; net income, £285; patrons, Trustees of the late Rev. Charles Simeon. The church, an ancient structure, was erected before the Conquest, and in Domesday book is noticed as the only church in Colchester; it was extensively repaired and modernised in 1758, when the tower at the west end was erected, and was some time since greatly beautified at an expense of £3000; the altar-piece is embellished with a fine painting, by Halls, of the raising of Jairus' daughter. The living of St. Runwald's is a discharged rectory, valued at £7. 13. 4.; net income, £160; patron, Charles Grey Round, Esq. The church, which is small, was erected about the close of the thirteenth century, and is partly of brick and partly of stone, with a wooden turret rising from the centre. The living of the parish of the Holy Trinity is a discharged rectory, valued at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £158; patrons, Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford. The church was erected in the year 1349, and consists of a nave, south aisle, and chancel, with a tower: only a part of the tower, the west door (now closed up), and a small portion about it, are of early date; but this small part is curious from its near approximation to Roman work, being plastered over bricks, and also from its having a straight-lined arch; the arch into the church is semicircular, and of flat tiling. The edifice contains several ancient and interesting monuments, among which is one to the memory of Dr. William Gilbert, chief physician to Queen Elizabeth and James I., and author of many learned works. The living of St. Botolph's is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Balliol College, and has a net income of £21: the tithes have been commuted for £230. 7. A new church, in the Norman style, lately built under the superintendence of Mr. Mason, of Ipswich, at a cost, including the purchase of the site, of above £7000, was consecrated on the 25th of Oct. 1837; the doorway and other portions of the western elevation are taken from the Norman tower at Bury-St. Edmund's; there are 1079 sittings, of which 815 are free; the Incorporated Society having granted £1000 towards the expense. The old church, which has been in ruins since the siege in 1648, exhibits indications of its original magnificence, and of the antiquity of its style, which appears to have been the early Norman, and of the same date as the neighbouring priory; it was built with bricks of extraordinary hardness, supposed to have been taken from the Roman station. The living of St. Giles' is a discharged rectory, valued at £30; patron and incumbent, Rev. John Woodrooffe Morgan, whose tithes have been commuted for £200, and whose glebe comprises one acre and a half, to which is attached a glebe-house. The church, a very ancient structure, which has been repaired and enlarged, contains a monument to the memory of Sir Charles Lucas and Sir George Lisle, who were shot by order of Fairfax, under the walls, after the siege of the town. The living of St. Leonard's is a discharged rectory, valued at £10; net income, £100; patrons, Master and Fellows of Balliol College. The church is a spacious structure, in good preservation, and was once remarkable for the exquisite carved work of the roof, which, having fallen into decay, was removed. The living of St. Mary Magdalen's is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11, and in the gift of the Crown: the church is small, and pleasantly situated on Magdalen Green. On the site of the chapel of St. Anne, which stood in the parish of St. James, and was formerly a hermitage, a barn has been erected, part of the chapel having been incorporated with the building. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, the Society of Friends, and Wesleyans.

The Free Grammar School was founded and endowed by the corporation, to whom Queen Elizabeth, in the 26th year of her reign, granted certain ecclesiastical revenues for that purpose: the income amounts to £181. 10. Dr. Harsnet, Archbishop of York, received the rudiments of his education in the school. Two schools for boys and girls were established in 1708: towards the purchase of the school-house Mr. Samuel Rush, in 1711, gave £100, and £50 were given for the same purpose by his widow. Mr. William Naggs, in 1747, assigned a freehold messuage and 25 acres of land for the better maintenance of the schools, to which fourteen other benefactions have been added. The two national central schools are an extension of the original plan of the charity school. There is another national school in St. Peter's parish; a Lancasterian school is supported by subscription; and there are schools maintained by the several dissenting congregations. Mr. John Winnock founded, and, in 1679, endowed, almshouses for twelve aged widows, with a rent-charge of £41, to which several other benefactions were added subsequently, and with one of them, by Mrs. Mary Barfield, four new houses were erected; the income now amounts to £235. Mr. Arthur Winsley, in 1726, founded and endowed almshouses for twelve men, to which six others have since been added. In 1791, Mr. John Kendall erected and endowed eight almshouses for widows whose husbands have died in Winsley's almshouses, or in default of such, for other single women: the small original endowment having been considerably augmented, the annual income amounts to about £166, and eight additional houses have been erected. Four almshouses for aged women were erected and endowed, in 1552, with £6. 6. 8. per annum by Ralph Fynch, to which £5 per annum have been added by John Lyon, and the interest of £262. 10., new four per cent. annuities by W. Godwin, together with £1000 three per cent. consols., for four additional houses: the income now amounts to £51. The Essex and Colchester general hospital, completed in 1820, and supported by subscription, is a neat building of white brick, situated on the south side of the London road. The poor law union of Colchester comprises the twelve parishes within, and the four without, the walls.

Of the monastic establishments anciently existing here, the hospital, originally founded at the command of Henry I., for a master and leprous brethren, and dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, by Eudo, who had been a principal officer of the household to William the Conqueror and his two sons, William and Henry, and the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £11, was re-founded, in 1610, by James I., for five poor brethren and a master, who is always the clergyman of the parish. The almshouses have been lately rebuilt, and are tenanted by five widows, who receive one shilling per week each; and the remainder of the income, which is very considerable, is appropriated to the master's use. Of the other ancient establishments, the principal was St. John's Abbey, founded in the reign of Henry I. by the same

Eudo, for monks of the Benedictine order, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £523. 17. : of this only the gateway is remaining, a handsome structure, in the later English style, and, consequently, either rebuilt since the foundation of the abbey, or a subsequent addition to it. To the south of the town was a monastery of Augustine canons, founded in the reign of Henry I., and dedicated to St. Julian and St. Botolph, by Ernulphus, who afterwards became prior: at the Dissolution its revenue was £113. 12. 8.: the only remains are its stately church, now in ruins, which was previously the parish church of St. Botolph. Without the walls was an hospital, or priory, of Crutched Friars, an order introduced into England about 1244, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £7. 7. 8. The priory of Franciscan, or Grey Friars, was founded, in 1309, by Robert Fitz-Walter, the only probable remains of which are the parish church of All Saints. Of the Walls by which the borough was surrounded, and in consideration of repairing which Richard II. is recorded to have exempted the burgesses from sending members to three of his parliaments, considerable portions still remain: they were strengthened by bastions, and defended on the west by an ancient fort of Roman construction, the remaining arches of which are built with Roman bricks; and the north and west sides, where the town was most exposed, were protected by deep intrenchments: the entrance to the town was by four principal gates and three posterns, which have been mostly demolished. The ruins of the Castle occupy an elevated site on the north side of High-street; the form is quadrilateral, and the walls of the keep, twelve feet in thickness, are almost entire: the building is of flint, stone and Roman brick intermixed, and is supposed to have been originally erected by the Romans, though subsequently repaired by Edward the Elder; the solidity of the structure has frustrated repeated attempts to demolish it, for the sake of the materials. The town and environs abound with relics of antiquity, among which is a quantity of Roman bricks in several of the churches and other buildings; and tessellated pavements, sepulchral urns, statues, lamps, rings, coins, medals, and almost every other species of Roman antiquities, have been discovered. Wm. Gilbert, born in 1540, physician to Elizabeth and James I., and author of a work on the qualities of the loadstone, entitled De Magnete, and other publications; and Dr. Samuel Harsnet, Archbishop of York, were natives of the place; and the late Rt. Hon. Charles Abbot, speaker of the house of commons (whose father was rector of All Saints), was elevated to the peerage, June 3rd, 1817, by the title of Baron of Colchester, which is now enjoyed by his son.

COLD-ASHBY, county of NORTHAMPTON.—See ASHBY, COLD.—And other places having a similar distinguishing prefix will be found under the proper name.

COLDCOATS, a township, in the parish of PONTELAND, union and W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $9\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Newcastle; containing 36 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Newcastle to Rothbury, and consists of East, West, South, and Middle Coldcoats, comprising together about 1020 acres of farm land. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £138. 9. 8., payable to Merton College, Oxford, and the vicarial for £24. 3. 2.

VOL. I.—641

COLDCOTES, a hamlet, in the township of SEACROFT, parish and borough of LEEDS, Lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK; containing 16 inhabitants.

COLD-DUNGHILLS, an extra-parochial district, adjoining the parish of ST. CLEMENT, borough and union of IPSWICH, E. division of SUFFOLK; containing 66 inhabitants.

COLD-MARTIN, a township, in the parish of CHATTON, union of GLENDALE, E. division of GLENDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 1 mile (E. by S.) from Wooler. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £16. 12. 7.

COLDMEECE, a township, in the parish of ECCLESHALL, union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD; containing 56 inhabitants COLDRED (St. PANCRAS), a parish, in the union of DOVOR, hundred of BEWSBOROUGH, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, 5 miles (N. W. by N.) from Dovor; containing 157 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, annexed to that of Sibbertswold, and valued in the king's books at £6. 2. 6. The church is surrounded by a trench, inclosing about two acres, with an artificial mount on the northern side, which tradition ascribes to Ceoldred, King of Mercia, from whom the parish is named, and who fought a battle near this spot, in 694, with Ina, King of the West Saxons: it is, however, probably of Roman origin, various relics of that people having been discovered on the site.

COLDREY, an extra-parochial liberty, attached to the parish of FROYLE, in the union and hundred of ALTON, Alton and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 18 inhabitants.

COLDWELL, a township, in the parish of KIRK-WHELPINGTON, union of BELLINGHAM, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 14 miles (W.) from Morpeth; containing 8 inhabitants. It comprises 355 acres, the property of the Duke of Northumberland. Mention occurs of this place in 1304, when Thomas de Harle is recorded to have given all his lands in "Caddewell" to Walter de Shaftow, for his life, at 20s. a year: in the 18th of Edward II. it was holden of the crown by a tenth part of a knight's fee. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £1. 9., and the vicarial for £3. 7. 6. A little to the west is a pediment of a cross, on the line of the old road from Eلسden to Newcastle.

COLE, a hamlet, in the parish of PITCOMB, union of WINCANTON, hundred of BRUTON, E. division of SOMERSET, 2 miles (S. W.) from Bruton; containing 39 inhabitants.

COLE, with WEST PARK, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of MALMESBURY, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. S. E.) from Malmesbury; containing 40 inhabitants.

COLEBROKE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of CREDITON, Crediton and N. divisions of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Crediton, on the road to Oakhampton; containing 878 inhabitants. The weaving of serges is carried on by hand-loom in many of the cottages. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £20; net income, £200; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church is an ancient structure, with a very handsome tower; in the north-east angle is a screen of carved oak, separating a sepulchral chapel, which formerly belonged to the Copleston family; and projecting from the centre of the south aisle is another chapel, attached to the Horwell estate; many of the ancient seats of richly-carved oak are remaining, but much mutilated. Near Wolmstone is a well, dedicated to the Virgin Mary. There are two charity schools.

COLEBROOK-DALE, county of SALOP.—See articles on MADELEY-MARKET and SHROPSHIRE.

COLEBURY, a tything, in the parish of ELING, union of NEW FOREST, hundred of REDBRIDGE, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 341 inhabitants.

COLEBY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the Higher division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, union and county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (S.) from Lincoln; containing 427 inhabitants. The village is situated on the brow of an oolite escarpment, on the road from Lincoln to Grantham, and commanding an extensive prospect. Coleby Hall is an interesting edifice in the Elizabethan style. The limestone, which throughout the parish lies very near the surface, forms an excellent material for building. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 12. 1.; net income, £126; patrons, Provost and Fellows of Oriel College, Oxford: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1759. The church was originally in the Norman style, now intermixed with the early and later English; the tower, of which the lower part is Norman, is surmounted by an elegant spire of early English character; the south entrance has a Norman arch of great beauty, and the font is in the same style. Many Roman coins, and great quantities of coarse pottery, among which are fragments of sepulchral urns, have been dug up in various parts of the parish, which is intersected by the Roman Ermin-street.

COLEBY, a hamlet, partly in the parish of BURTON-UPON-STATHER, and partly in that of WEST HALTON, union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, N. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 68 inhabitants.

COLEDALE, with PORTINGSSCALE, a township, in the parish of CROSTHWAITHE, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 3 miles (W.) from Keswick; containing 262 inhabitants.

COLEFORD, a market-town and chapelry, in the parish of NEWLAND, union of MONMOUTH, hundred of ST. BRIAVELL'S, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 20 miles (W. S. W.) from Gloucester, and 124 (W. by N.) from London; containing 2208 inhabitants. This place, which is pleasantly situated on the verge of the county, next Monmouthshire, and bounded on the north and east by the Forest of Dean, obtained the grant of a market from James I. During the parliamentary war, a skirmish took place previously to the siege of Gloucester, between a party of royalists, commanded by Lord Herbert, and the parliamentary forces under Col. Barrow, in which the market-house was destroyed, and Sir Richard Lawdy, major-general of South Wales, and several officers, were killed: at a subsequent period, during the same war, the ancient chapel was demolished. The town consists principally of one spacious street, in which is the market-place; the houses are in general neat and well built; the environs are pleasant, and in some points beautifully picturesque, and in the vicinity are several elegant mansions. Many of the labouring class are employed in extensive iron-works in the neighbourhood. There is a pottery for the manufacture of various articles of common ware; and sandstone is quarried to a considerable extent, the best of which is used for troughs, mill-stones, &c., and that of inferior quality for drains and walls. There is a tramroad to Monmouth, above five miles distant, for the conveyance of coal and lime: this place lies on the edge of the Forest of Dean coal basin, and some pits have been sunk for coal within its boundary. The market is on Friday; and fairs are held on June 20th for wool, and Dec. 5th for cattle and pedlery. The market-house was rebuilt in 1679, towards defraying the expense of which Charles II. contributed £50. The county magistrates hold a petty-session here for a portion of the Forest division. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £142; patron, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. The chapel, built in the reign of Queen Anne, who contributed £300 towards its erection, and substantially rebuilt of stone in 1821, is dedicated to All Saints; it has accommodation for about 1000 persons; a new organ was lately erected. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans; and a national school has been erected. A sum of £200 was recently bequeathed by Colonel Ollney, the interest to be distributed among the poor at Christmas, in coal and blankets. Vestiges of Offa's Dyke may be distinctly traced in some parts of the town.

COLEFORD, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of KILMERSDON, E. division of SOMERSET, 6¼ miles (W. by N.) from Frome; containing 825 inhabitants. A market was anciently held here, which has been long discontinued, and the fair, which was much frequented, is now almost entirely disused. A coal-mine near the church, the most southerly in the coal basin of the district, yields chiefly small coal. This place, with the neighbouring hamlets of Lypeat and Kilmersdon, was constituted a chapelry in 1831, when a chapel was erected: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Kilmersdon; net income, £120. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Independents; and a school, in connexion with the National Society, was erected by subscription, in 1835. There are some remains of an ancient church, consisting of the chancel, and part of the nave, near the present church; and in the village are the ruins of a turret with a stone staircase, and piscina.

COLEMORE, a parish, in the union of PETERSFIELD, hundred of BARTON-STACEY, Andover and N. divisions, though locally in the hundred of SELBORNE, Alton (N.) division, of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5¾ miles (S. by W.) from Alton; containing 144 inhabitants. This parish, noticed in the Domesday survey and other records under the name of Colmere, is supposed to have derived that appellation from the situation of the greater portion of it, formerly, near the western mere or boundary of the ancient forest of Wolmer, where great quantities of charcoal were made. It comprises, with the chapelry of Prior's-Dean, 2800 acres, of which the soil is fertile, the surface is elevated, and the scenery abounds in sylvan beauty. The living is a rectory, with Prior's-

Dean united, valued in the king's books at £22. 9. 4½.; patron and incumbent, Rev. John Bury Bourne. The tithes have been commuted for £500, and the glebe consists of about 30 acres, to which there is an excellent glebe-house. The chapel of ease at Prior's-Dean, which is endowed with the great tithes, is romantically situated in a sequestered spot of great beauty, and contains several monuments to the Compton and Titchborne families. In the churchyard is a yew-tree, which, with one exception, is the largest in England. A school at Hawkley, contiguous to Prior's-Dean, is supported by voluntary contributions. The living of Colemore was held from 1608 for many years, by the Rev. John Greaves, the astronomer and mathematician, who was a native of this parish; and subsequently it was held by the Rev. Dr. Richard Pococke, the celebrated eastern traveller, Fellow of New College, Oxford.

COLE-ORTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH, hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 2 miles (E.) from Ashby; containing 601 inhabitants. This place is beautifully situated on the Ashby and Loughborough road, between the romantic scenery of Charnwood Forest, on one side, and the less diversified country beyond Ashby, towards Staffordshire, on the other. The parish comprises by measurement 2600 acres, of which the surface is undulated. The village is at the extremity of the forest, and, with the church, and the handsome mansion of the Beaumont family, forms an interesting and prominent feature in the landscape. In the park grounds is an epitaph by Wordsworth to Francis Beaumont, the poet, who was born in an extra-parochial district adjoining: the neighbourhood was one of Wordsworth's favourite places of resort, and much of it has been the subject of his muse; here also, it is said, he derived materials for the Ecclesiastical Sketches. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 6. 0½.; net income, £267; patron, Sir G. H. W. Beaumont, Bart.: the glebe contains about 7 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a compact structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, surmounted by a handsome spire, and was thoroughly repaired in 1812: the altar-piece is embellished with a fine painting of the angel delivering St. Peter from prison, presented by the late Sir George Beaumont, who also ornamented the south-east window with rich stained glass, brought from Rouen. In an aisle railed off from the rest of the church is an elegant monument of alabaster, with two reclining figures, to the memory of Sir Henry and Lady Elizabeth Beaumont, the former of whom died in 1607, and the latter in 1608: there is also a tablet, by Chantrey, to the late Sir G. Beaumont and his lady. Thomas, Viscount Beaumont, in 1702, founded a school for children, and an hospital for six widows, which he endowed with the great tithes of Swaunington, valued now at about £193 per annum: the school is in connexion with the National Society.

COLERIDGE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CREDITON, hundred of NORTH TAWTON, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, 10 miles (W. N. W.) from Crediton; containing 677 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Taw, abounding with excellent trout, and comprises by computation 3300 acres. About forty persons are employed in the weaving of serge by hand-loom. Facility of communication is afforded by a road which, within the last few years, has been formed through the centre of the parish, connecting Bideford with Exeter. A fair is held on the first Monday after the 19th of September, when a few cattle and sheep are exposed for sale. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 8. 9.; net income, £142; patron, Bishop of Exeter; impropiator, Hon. N. Fellowes: the rectorial tithes have been commuted for £200; the glebe comprises 16 acres. The church is a handsome early English structure, with the exception of the chancel and the east end of the north aisle, which are of the later English style, and were erected by John Evans, supposed to have been lord of the manor, and whose monument, with a recumbent statue, is placed in the latter; the east window is embellished with stained glass, in which is a full-length portrait of Edward VI., with the sceptre and a Bible. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and a parochial school is supported by subscription. On Trinity Green was an ancient chapel, now converted into a dwelling-house; and there are some remains of a Roman encampment, near the Taw.

COLERNE (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHIPPENHAM, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, 7 miles (W. by S.) from Chippenham; containing 1209 inhabitants. This place, formerly called Coldhorn, derives its name from its bleak situation upon the summit of one of the highest hills in the vicinity of Bath. The neighbourhood was the scene of many sanguinary conflicts between the Saxons and the Danes. About sixty years ago the village was destroyed by fire, and rebuilt of stone, without much regard to uniformity. The parish comprises by computation 3652 acres: stone of good quality for ordinary purposes is abundant, but is not quarried. A small fair for sheep and pigs is held annually. The Great Western railway passes about a mile and a half to the south of the church. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 16.; net income, £92; patron, Warden of New College, Oxford. There is also a sinecure rectory, valued at £16. 11. 10½., and annexed to the wardenship. The church is a handsome structure, in the later English style, with a stately tower. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a school is supported by subscription. The late Hon. Mrs. Forrester bequeathed property, which was expended in the purchase of thirty acres of land, for the poor. The ancient Wansdyke touches the parish in two places, constituting the boundary of the county. On Colerne Down is a double intrenchment, called Northwood Camp; and in the park is another fortification. Within the last few years a very beautiful Roman tessellated pavement, apparently the floors of several apartments, has been partly discovered in an arable field. There is a spring holding a quantity of lime in solution, the water of which incrusts, and gives the appearance of petrification to any thing upon which it falls.

COLESBORNE (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of RAPSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 7 miles (S. by E.) from Cheltenham; containing 256 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 2200 acres, and is situated on a river that has, by recent observation, been ascertained to be the Thames, of which the source is within four miles. There are some hills in the parish, whereof that called Pen Hill, supposed to be the highest in the county, commands an extensive prospect; and on the summit of another, of inferior elevation, are the remains of a Norman camp. The plain between these hills was the scene of a sanguinary battle, in an early period of English history. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 16. 10½; patron, and impropiator of two-thirds of the tithes, Henry Elwes, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £242. 14., and the rectorial for £122. 10.; the glebe contains 31 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. A school is supported by Mr. Elwes and the Rev. James Holmes. Raps-gate, a hamlet in the parish, gives name to the hundred.

COLESHILL, a hamlet, in the union of AMERSHAM, partly in the parish of AMERSHAM, hundred of DACORUM, in a detached portion of the county of HERTFORD, and partly in the parish of BEACONSFIELD, hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 1¾ mile (S. by W.) from Amersham; containing 547 inhabitants. This place is situated on elevated ground, celebrated for the extent and variety of the prospects on every side; commanding a view over six counties, adorned with lofty woods and finely diversified by hill and dale. The manor-house occupies the site of an ancient and splendid seat, called "Ould Stock," or Stock Place, which originally belonged to the family of Bohun, Earl of Hereford, Essex, and Northampton, and High Constable of England, who resided here about the year 1360. The manor was afterwards the inheritance of the Wallers, of whom Edmund, the lyric poet, was born here, and represented the borough of Amersham in three parliaments: near the manor-house is Waller's oak, said to have been planted by the poet, but evidently of much greater antiquity. The hamlet comprises 1800 acres, of which one-fourth is woodland; clay and chalk are found in great abundance, the former of excellent quality for the manufacture of common earthenware, and the latter a suitable manure for the soil. According to tradition, an ancient chapel once existed, and the truth of the opinion has derived confirmation from the recent discovery of the foundations of an old building of that kind, on the estate called Churchfield.

COLESHILL (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of FARRINGDON, partly in the hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, N. division of WILTS, but chiefly in the hundred of SHRIVENHAM, county of BERKS, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Great Farringdon; containing 386 inhabitants. The parish derives its name from the elevated situation of the village above the river Cole, which forms its western boundary; it comprises 1992*a. 1r. 24p.*, chiefly pasture land. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17. 11. 8.; patron and impropiator, Earl of Radnor: the great tithes have been commuted for £400, and the vicarial for £350; the glebe contains 1*a. 18p.*, to which there is a glebe-house. The church has, at the west end, an embattled tower with pinnacles, and contains some handsome monuments; the east window of the chancel exhibits some fine stained glass, representing the Nativity, presented by the Earl of Radnor, in 1787. Lord Simon Digby, in 1694, gave £500 for teaching children and other charitable purposes; in the same year, Offalia Rawlins made a donation of £100; and in 1705, the Rev. John Pinsent, vicar, gave an estate, now producing about £28 per annum, for apprenticing children. The funds having increased considerably by a benefaction of the Earl of Radnor, the income now amounts to £73. Coleshill gives the title of Baron to the Earl of Radnor, who has a splendid mansion here, called Coleshill House.

COLESHILL (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a market-town and parish, in the union of MERIDEN, Birmingham division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 18 miles (N. by W.) from Warwick, and 103½ (N. W.) from London; containing 2172 inhabitants. This place derives its name from its situation on the acclivity and summit of an eminence, rising gradually from the south bank of the river Cole, over which is a neat brick bridge of six arches leading into the town: it consists principally of one long street, from the centre of which a shorter one, of considerable width, diverges towards the church, and affords a convenient area for the market-place, in which is a portico of brick. The houses are in general well built, and several of them are handsome, and of modern date; the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from springs, and from the rivers Cole and Blyth, which run through the parish. The Derby Junction railway has two stations here, one on the Hampton line, and the other on the Birmingham line. The market is on Wednesday; and there are fairs on the first Monday in January for cattle and sheep, on Shrove-Monday for horses, which is the principal fair, and on May 6th, the first Monday in July, and first Monday after Sept. 25th, all for cattle. The county magistrates meet every fortnight, two headboroughs, two clerks of the market, and two pinners, are chosen at the court of the lord of the manor, held in October. The bishop holds his triennial visitation in August; and a court of probate is held half yearly in April and October. Part of the workhouse is appropriated to the confinement of male-factors previously to their committal. The town is the place of election for the northern division of the county.

The parish is intersected by the roads from Lichfield to Coventry, and from Birmingham to Atherstone and Nuneaton, and comprises 5272 acres, of which two-thirds are arable land, and the remainder pasture; a portion is attached to Coleshill Park, about a quarter of a mile west of the town: the river Tame runs through the place, and forms a boundary on the north, separating it from the parish of Curdworth. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 18. 6½., and in the patronage of the Earl Digby (the impropiator), with a net income of £718: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1779. The church is a spacious structure, in the decorated English style, with a lofty tower surmounted by an octagonal spire, crocketed at the angles, part of which was taken down and rebuilt in the same style in 1812; it contains an ancient Norman font, with an effigy of St. Peter, and a representation of the Crucifixion rudely sculptured on it. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school was founded in the reign of James I., by Lord Digby, who, with some of the parishioners, endowed it with 70 acres of land and several houses; the management is vested in thirteen trustees, of whom Earl Digby nominates three. A school was endowed, in 1694, by Simon, Lord Digby, with £500, which have been vested in the purchase of land, for instructing girls, and apprenticing children; a new school-house has recently been erected, and under the same trust is an endowment for two almshouses, &c. A large building is appropriated as a boys' and an infants' school. About a mile to the east of the town is Maxstoke Castle, in a high state of preservation, the property of Wm. Dilke, Esq., a descendant of Sir Thos. Dilke, who purchased it in the 41st of the reign of Elizabeth, from Sir Thomas Egerton, keeper of the great seal; the buildings occupy an irregular quadrilateral area, inclosed by an embattled wall, and defended at the angles by octagonal towers. About a mile and a half to the south-east of the castle are the remains of Maxstoke priory, consisting of part of the walls and the entrance gateway; the conventual buildings have been converted into farm-offices. The castle and the remains of the priory are in the decorated English style, and appear to be coeval with the church. Coleshill gives the title of Viscount to Earl Digby.

COLEY, a chapelry, in the township of HIPPERHOLME cum BRIGHOUSE, parish and union of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (N. E. by E.) from Halifax. In this chapelry, whereof the surface is mountainous and the scenery romantic, are extensive quarries of stone, in which, and in the various manufactures in the vicinity, the inhabitants are principally employed. There are also coal-mines, in full operation. The living is a perpetual curacy, the net income of which, previously £125, was, in 1841, augmented with £12 per annum from the Canonry and Prebend Suspension Fund; patron, the Vicar of Halifax: there is a good glebe-house. The chapel, originally founded in 1529, was rebuilt in 1711, and again in 1816, in the later English style; it stands on an eminence, and has a square tower ornamented with pinnacles, and accommodates 950 persons. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Independents; and a school in connexion with the National Society is about to be erected. At North Ofram, the district in which the stone quarries are situated, is a mineral spring.

COLKIRK (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of MITFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of LAUNDITCH, W. division of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Fakenham; containing 462 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1487*a.* 21*p.*, of which 955 acres are arable, 392 meadow and pasture, and 140 woodland; the surface is elevated, and the scenery interesting. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Stibbard annexed, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Townshend family: the tithes have been commuted for £456. 16. 9., and the glebe comprises 46 acres, with a glebe-house. The church is in the later English style, with a square embattled tower. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists; and a national school is supported by subscription. The poor have £25 per annum from a house bequeathed by Samuel Collison and another, in 1767; also 7 acres of land, let for £7 per annum.

COLLIERLY, a township, in the parish and union of LANCHESTER, W. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Gateshead; containing, with the villages of Dip-ton and Pontop, 853 inhabitants. About sixty years ago this district was nearly all waste and uninclosed land, and very thinly inhabited, but by the recommencement of coal-mining (formerly carried on to a considerable extent, and employing numerous people) and the formation of a railway, it has acquired its present importance and increased population. The township comprises by computation 1700 acres, of which about 500, mostly arable, are the property of the Marquess of Bute: the soil is chiefly clay, and, though cold and inferior, produces good oats; and the surface is generally elevated: Pontop Pyke is the highest ground in the district, being upwards of 1000 feet above the level of the sea. The Pontop Pyke colliery was first opened in the year 1743, and the working of it was renewed in 1834 by the Stanhope and Tyne Railway Company, to whom Mr. Edward Smith is the viewer: the railway passes through the district, and conveys the coal to the shipping at Shields. The townships of Collierly, Kyo (containing the populous village of Annfield), Billingside, and part of Greencroft, were formed, in 1842, into a district parish for ecclesiastical purposes, with a population of 2000. A church, dedicated to St. Thomas, was consecrated in 1841; it is a neat structure, in the early English style, with a campanile tower and lancet windows, and was erected at an expense of £700, raised by subscription, aided by a grant of £150 from the Church Building Society, the site being given by Miss Clayton, of London; it contains 300 sittings, of which 250 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £150; patron, the Bishop of Durham. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans. A Sunday school is held in the church; and at Annfield are several day schools, one of which is aided by a donation of £15 per annum from the Stanhope and Tyne Company.

COLLIERS-END, a hamlet, in the parish of STAN-DON, union of WARE, hundred of BRAUGHIN, county of HERTFORD; containing 233 inhabitants.

COLLINGBOURN-DUCIS (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of PEWSEY, hundred of ELSTUB and EVERLEY, Everley and Pewsey, and S. divisions of WILTS, 9 miles (S. E.) from Pewsey; containing 518 inhabitants. This place was formerly part of the duchy of Lancaster, from which it acquired the adjunct to its name; but Henry VIII. alienated it to the Earl of Hertford, afterwards Duke of Somerset, and Protector of England, upon whose attainder it reverted to the crown, and was granted by Queen Elizabeth to Edward, Earl of Hertford. The parish is on the road between Andover and Marlborough, and comprises by measurement 3241 acres, of which the soil is generally of a light clayey nature; the surface is varied, rising in several parts into hills of considerable elevation, and the village, situated on a level plain, is watered by a small rivulet. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Marquess of Ailesbury: the tithes have been commuted for £532, and the glebe contains about 54 acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

COLLINGBOURN-KINGSTONE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of PEWSEY, hundred of KINWARDSTONE, Everley and Pewsey, and S. divisions of WILTS, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Ludgershall; containing 933 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15. 7. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$; net income, £261; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Winchester. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school for girls is supported by the Marchioness of Ailesbury.

John Norris, eminent as a divine and philosopher, was born at the vicarage-house, in 1567.

COLLINGHAM (St. OSWALD), a parish, in the Lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. S. W.) from Wetherby; containing 324 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the north by the river Wharfe, and contains some beautiful scenery; it comprises about 2500 acres, of which 150 acres are woodland, and about two-thirds of the remainder arable. Sandstone of excellent quality is found in abundance. Beilby-Grange, in Micklethwaite, the seat of Alexander Browne, Esq., was purchased from Lord Wenlock, in 1841; the noble mansion is surrounded by an extensive park, and the present owner has added much to its beauty. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, valued in the king's books at £3. 11. $5\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Mrs. Wheler, with a net income of £414: the vicarage-house is picturesquely situated. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1814. A school was founded in 1738, and endowed with £34 per annum, from funds arising from a bequest of Lady Elizabeth Hastings.

COLLINGHAM, NORTH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union, and N. division of the wapentake, of NEWARK, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Newark; containing 911 inhabitants. The living is discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 14. 2.; net income, £92; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Peterborough. The church is a very ancient structure, in the Norman style. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists; and a school is supported by an endowment in land, the rent of which is £39 per annum.

COLLINGHAM, SOUTH (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union, and N. division of the wapentake, of NEWARK, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Newark; containing 721 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the road from Newark to Gainsborough, and bounded on the west by the river Trent, consists of 2862*a. 2r. 25p.*; the surface, though generally flat, acquires a degree of elevation towards the east; the soil is extremely various, comprising almost every variety, from the richest loam to the most sterile heath; near the village it is sandy, but well adapted to the growth of early vegetables, of which large quantities are raised. Fairs for horses of superior breed, and for sheep and pigs, are held on the 14th of May, Whit-Tuesday, Aug. 2nd, Nov. 1st, and the Monday before the 11th of Dec.; and there is a great market for cheese and live stock on the Wednesday before the 2nd of October. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 1. $10\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £426; patron, Bishop of Peterborough. The tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1790. There are two places of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school is supported by subscription. Here is a lofty tumulus, called Potter's Hill, where many Roman relics have been found; and south of this, on the Fosse-road, on the Lincolnshire boundary, is the site of the Crococolana of Antoninus, now occupied by the village of Brough, where coins, termed Brugh pennies, have been ploughed up, and ancient foundations often discovered. Human bones, with remains of coffins, have also been turned up in a place called the Chapel Close.

COLLINGTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BROMYARD, hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Bromyard; containing 160 inhabitants. It is intersected by the road from Bromyard to Tenbury, and comprises 936 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £2. 18. 10., and in the gift of W. Lacon Childe, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £140. 1. 9., and the glebe contains 42 acres.

COLLINGTON (St. COLUMBUS), a parish, in the union of HARDINGSTONE, hundred of WYMMERSLEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Northampton; containing 232 inhabitants. The parish comprises by admeasurement 646 acres, of level surface; the soil is various, part being a strong clay; near the village, rich grazing land, and in other parts sandy. The village is within two miles of the Blisworth station on the London and Birmingham railway; and the road from Northampton to Stony-Stratford intersects the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 10. 5.; net income, £331; patron and incumbent, Rev. Benjamin Hill. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1779; the glebe contains about 238 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

COLLITON-ROW, a tything, in the parish of the HOLY TRINITY, DORCHESTER, union of DORCHESTER, hundred of GEORGE, Dorchester division of DORSET. It forms a small street, on the south of Gildepath Hill, and by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, was incorporated with the borough of Dorchester for elective purposes.

COLLOW, a hamlet, in the parish of LEGSBY, union of CAISTOR, W. division of the wapentake of WRAGGAE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 23 inhabitants.

COLLUMPTON.—See CULLOMPTON.

COLLY-WESTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of STAMFORD, hundred of WILLYBROOK, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Stamford; containing 434 inhabitants. This place is situated on a very high hill, rising from the river Welland, and is intersected by the Stamford and Kettering road; it consists of 1321*a. 2r. 16p.* There are extensive quarries, the material of which, when exposed to the frost, becomes excellent slate, and supplies the neighbourhood for many miles around. An act for inclosing lands was passed in 1841. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £302. 10., and the glebe contains 50 acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

COLMWORTH (St. DENIS), a parish, in the hundred of BRADFORD, union and county of BEDFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from St. Neot's; containing 575 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 2300 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18; patron and incumbent, Rev. W. Gery. The tithes were commuted, at the recent inclosure of the parish, for about 450 acres of land, valued at 15*s.* per acre per annum. The church is a handsome structure, with a lofty spire, in the early English style. The chancel has an elegant window, of large dimensions, and contains a handsome monument in alabaster, to Sir William Dyer, a descendant of Judge Dyer; and in the wall is an ancient brass, with the date 1389. A school on the national plan is supported by a bequest of £300 three per cents. by the late Rev. R. S. Hill, rector.

COLN (St. DENIS), a parish, in the union of NORTHLEACH, Upper division of the hundred of DEERHURST, though locally in the hundred of BRADLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Northleach; containing 200 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south-west by the river Coln, and on the north-west by the old Roman Fosse-way, and comprises by computation 1800 acres, of which the soil is light and stony, and the surface hilly: stone is quarried for common buildings, and the repair of roads. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 19. 4½; net income, £450; patrons, Master and Fellows of Pembroke College, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents, in 1797; the glebe contains 70 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. A school is partly supported by the rector, and partly by £5. 5. per annum, bequeathed by Dr. Radcliffe.

COLN-ST. ALDWIN'S (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of NORTHLEACH, hundred of BRIGHTWELLS-BARROW, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (N.) from Fairford; containing 428 inhabitants. It is pleasantly situated on an eminence, rising gently from the river Coln, and comprises by computation 2000 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 19. 4½; net income, £90; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. The tithes were commuted for land, in 1769. The church is an ancient structure, partly in the Norman and partly in the early English style. Schools are supported by subscription.

COLN ROGERS (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of NORTHLEACH, hundred of BRADLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Northleach; containing 137 inhabitants. It is bounded on the north-east by the river Coln, and comprises about 1400 acres, of which the surface is irregular, and the soil in some portions clayey and wet, and in others stony. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 0. 5., and in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester: the tithes have been commuted for £250, and the glebe contains about 40 acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

COLNBROOK, a chapelry, and formerly a market-town, partly in the parish of STANWELL, hundred of SPELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, but chiefly in the parishes of HORTON, IVER, and LANGLEY-MARISH, hundred of STOKE, union of ETON, county of BUCKINGHAM, 46 miles (S. E. by S.) from Buckingham, and 17 (W. by S.) from London, on the road to Bath; containing 1050 inhabitants. This place, which is of great antiquity, is supposed to have been the station Ad Pontes of Antoninus: it derives its name from the river Colne, by which it is separated from Middlesex, and is intersected by different branches of that river, over each of which is a small bridge. The town consists principally of one long street, and the houses are in general neatly built, and of respectable appearance. The trade chiefly arises from its situation as a great thoroughfare, which has made it a considerable posting-town; and it is about a mile and three-quarters distant from the Great Western railway. The market has long been discontinued, and the market-house and the chapel, which were inconveniently situated in the narrower part of the town, have been removed by the commissioners of the turnpike-roads, who have rebuilt the chapel, which is now a neat modern edifice, dedicated to St. Mary. Fairs are held on April 5th and May 3rd, for cattle and horses. The government, by charter of Henry VIII., which was renewed in the reign of Charles I., is vested in a bailiff and burgesses. The living is a donative; net income, £103; patrons, Trustees of the late George Townsend, Esq., for fellows of Pembroke College, Oxford. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and several charitable bequests have been made, the principal of which is one by Thomas Pitt, in the year 1657, of some land, now producing £32 per annum, for distribution among the poor.

COLNE (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of ST. IVES, hundred of HURSTINGSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, 5 miles (N. E.) from St. Ives; containing 544 inhabitants. It comprises about 2000 acres, of which the surface is very flat, and the soil one of the finest in the kingdom, land letting for about £3 per acre. The living is annexed, with that of Pidley, to the rectory of Somersham: the tithes have been commuted for £540. The church is in the early English style, with a western tower, and contains some remains of figures and armorial bearings in stained glass. A school is supported by subscription.

COLNE, a market-town and chapelry, in the parish of WHALLEY, union of BURNLEY, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 35 miles (S. E.) from Lancaster, and 217 (N. N. W.) from London; containing 8615 inhabitants. This place is supposed by the geographer of Ravennas to have been a Roman station, the site of which is by Whitaker, the historian of Manchester, referred to Castor Cliff, a lofty eminence about a mile south of the town, where are still the vestiges of a quadrilateral camp, 120 yards in length, and 110 in breadth, surrounded by a double vallum and fosse. The camp is, by Dr. Whitaker, the historian of the parish of Whalley, considered only as the castra æstiva of the primary station, which, perhaps on better authority, he places in the low grounds beneath the town and near the bank of the Colne water, but of which every vestige has been obliterated by cultivation. Numerous Roman coins have been found at various times, and among them several of Gordianus and other emperors, inclosed in a large silver cup turned up by the plough in 1696. The town appears to have arisen with Lancaster, Manchester, and other places in the county, soon after its conquest by Agricola, in the year 79, and derives its name either from the Saxon Colunio, the supposed name of the Roman station, or from the Saxon Culme, coal, with which the neighbourhood abounds: it is situated on an elevated point of land between the river Calder and the Leeds and Liverpool canal; the streets are paved, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. A subscription library has been established. The woollen-manufacture was carried on here previously to the arrival of the Flemings in England in the time of Edward III., as appears from the rent-roll of the last Henry de Lacy, lord of the manor in 1311, in which a fulling-mill is returned as being valued at 6s. 8d. per annum; and the manufacture of shalloons, calimaucos, and tammies, was also extensively carried on, for the sale of which a Piece-hall was erected in 1775, a substantial stone building, for many years the principal mart in the district for woollen and worsted goods, but now appropriated to the sale of general merchandise at the fairs only. The cotton manufacture is at present the principal branch of business; the chief articles are calico and dimity for the Manchester market, both of them being made to a considerable extent. The Leeds and Liverpool canal passes through a tunnel a mile in length, at a small distance from the town, affording a facility of conveyance for the coal, freestone, slate, and lime, with which the neighbouring hills abound, and for the produce of the factories. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday; on the last Wednesday in every month is a large cattle market; and the fairs are March 7th, May 13th, for cattle, and 15th for pedlery, Oct. 11th, and December 21st. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. An act for the recovery of small debts was passed in 1841.

The place comprises by computation 20,000 acres, chiefly pasture and meadow land. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £179; patron, Vicar of Whalley. The chapel, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a very ancient structure, erected probably soon after the Conquest, and, in the reign of Henry I., given to the priory of Pontefract by Hugh de Val; it was substantially repaired, or partly rebuilt, in the reign of Henry VIII., when the only remains preserved of the original edifice were the finely-carved screen at the entrance and on the sides of the choir, and three massive circular columns in the north aisle, one of which, having been undermined by some recent interments, suddenly gave way in 1815, and endangered the whole building, which has since been rendered firm and secure. Christchurch, in the early English style, consecrated on the 30th of June, 1836; and St. Thomas' in Barrowford, also built in 1836, were erected by subscription, liberally aided by the Chester Diocesan Church-Building Society. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, and Methodists of the New Connexion. The grammar school, of very uncertain foundation, is endowed with about £16 per annum, for which six boys are taught free, four of them by means of a bequest of £40 from Thomas Blakey, Esq., in 1687; the old school-room was taken down, and on its site a new one erected by subscription, in 1812. Dr. Tillotson, Archbishop of Canterbury, received the rudiments of his education at the school. A school was founded and endowed with £16 per annum, in 1746, at Laneshaw Bridge, by John Emmot, Esq.

COLNE, EARL'S (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of HALSTEAD, Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, N. division of ESSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Halstead; containing 1385 inhabitants. This parish takes the prefix to its name from the family of De Vere, Earls of Oxford, to whom it belonged at the time of the Domesday survey, and its name, in common with others in the district, from the river Colne, over which is a bridge on the line of the Roman road from Colchester. It is about ten miles in circumference, and consists chiefly of elevated ground; the soil is a kind of loam, partially mixed with sand, and though not of great tenacity, is tolerably fertile. A fair is held on March 25th. The living is a vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £8. 10. 10.; patron and impropiator of the remainder of the rectorial tithes, H. H. Carwardine, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £242. 14. 9., and the vicarial for £670. The church is a handsome ancient edifice, with a massive tower partly of flint, and ornamented with several monuments of the De Veres, which were removed from the church of a Benedictine priory, founded here in the eleventh century by Aubrey de Vere, who became one of the monks: it was dedicated to St. Mary and St. John the Evangelist, and was made a cell to the abbey of Abingdon, in Berkshire; and at the Dissolution it had a prior and ten monks, with a revenue of £175. 14. 8. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and the Society of Friends. Certain land was bequeathed, in the reign of Henry VIII., by the Rev. Christopher Swallow, who died in 1539, for the support of a grammar school; the proceeds amount to £188 per annum. There is also a national school for girls. Thomas Audley, lord chancellor of England in the reign of Henry VIII., was born in the parish.

COLNE, ENGAIN (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of LEXDEN and WINSTREE, Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, N. division of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Halstead; containing 685 inhabitants. This parish, which derives the affix to its name from the family of Engain, proprietors of the manor, comprises 2444a. 2r. 5p., whereof about 1896 are arable, 297 pasture, 15 hops, and 148 woods and plantations; the lands are in general elevated, and the soil is of light quality, consisting of loam, mixed with sand. The river Colne forms the southern boundary, near which passes the Roman road from Colchester. A fair for toys is held on Whit Monday and Tuesday. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 17. 6., and in the gift of the Governors of Christ's Hospital: the tithes have been commuted for £750, and the glebe comprises 56 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church, a plain edifice with a good tower of brick, is pleasantly situated; the parsonage house is a handsome residence.

COLNE, WAKES (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of LEXDEN and WINSTREE, Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, N. division of ESSEX, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Halstead; containing 444 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the road from Colchester to Halstead, derives its distinguishing epithet from one of its former proprietors: it is about eight miles in circumference, and consists generally of low lands; the soil is loam of various kinds, intermixed with clay. The Roman road from Colchester passes through the parish, to the southward of which flows the river Colne. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 0. 5., and in the patronage of the Earl of Verulam: the tithes have been commuted for £574, and the glebe contains $18\frac{1}{2}$ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a plain edifice, with a steeple of wood.

COLNE, WHITE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of HALSTEAD, Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, N. division of ESSEX, 4 miles (E.) from Halstead; containing 419 inhabitants. It comprises 1467a. 2r. 33p., chiefly arable land, and is bounded on the south by the river Colne; the lands are generally elevated, and the soil of light quality. The living is a perpetual curacy, or donative; patron and impropiator, W. E. Hume, Esq.: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £345, and the perpetual curate's for £135, and the glebe comprises a quarter of an acre. The church, by the name of Colne mi blanc, was assigned by Aubrey de Vere, founder of Colne priory, and confirmed by Aubrey, his son, to the monks at Colne: after the Dissolution it was given to John, Earl of Oxford, and became a donative or curacy; it is an ancient building, with a square embattled tower, formerly surmounted by a spire. There is a small national school. The old Roman road from Colchester passes on the south of the parish.

COLNEY (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of HENSTEAD, hundred of HUMBLYARD, E. division of NORFOLK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Norwich; containing 110 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the north-east by the river Yare, and intersected by the road from Norwich to Hingham, comprises about 900 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the gift of J. Scott, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £219, and the glebe contains 38 acres. The church, a small edifice, with a circular tower, has recently been repewed; the font is richly sculptured. A school is supported by the patron and the rector.

COLNEY-HATCH, a hamlet, in the parish of FRYERN-BARNET, union of BARNET, Finsbury division of the hundred of OSSULSTON, county of MIDDLESEX; containing 216 inhabitants.

COLSTERWORTH (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of GRANTHAM, partly in the wapentake of BELTISLOE, but chiefly in the soke of GRANTHAM, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (S.) from Grantham; containing, with the hamlets of Twyford and Woolsthorpe, 1017 inhabitants. The village is situated in a beautiful valley, through which winds the river Witham, and the parish is remarkable for the salubrity of the air. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 10.; net income, £585; patron, H. Mirehouse, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1805. The church is a small structure, of early English architecture, with a good tower in the later style, and contains a gallery, erected at the expense of Sir Isaac Newton. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school was founded and endowed in 1824, by E. Turnor, Esq. Sir Isaac Newton was born at Woolsthorpe, on Christmas-day, 1642, about three months after the death of his father, who was lord of the manor; he received the rudiments of his education at the grammar school at Grantham, and was admitted at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1660. The Roman road called High Dyke, passes through the parish.

COLSTON-BASSET (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BINGHAM, S. division of the wapentake of BINGHAM and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 10 miles (S. E. by E.) from Nottingham; containing 403 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Nottingham to Waltham, and comprises about 2500 acres, the soil of which is chiefly a strong clay; the river Smite and the Grantham Canal pass within half a mile. Limestone is quarried, and sent, when burnt, in considerable quantities to the surrounding districts. The ancient cross in the village was rebuilt in 1831, in commemoration of the coronation of William IV. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £270; impropiator, H. Martin, Esq. The glebe contains about 44 acres, and a good glebe-house has been built by the present incumbent. The church is an ancient and beautiful cruciform structure, in the later English style, standing on a hill at a short distance from the village; it contains a remarkably handsome screen of oak. There are places of worship for Roman Catholics and Methodists.

COLTISHALL (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of AYLHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 7 miles (N. N. E.) from Norwich; containing 897 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1129*a.* 29*p.*, whereof about 1065 acres are arable, 30 pasture, and 34 woodland, and is situated on the river Bure; the road from Norwich to North Walsham runs through the village, the west side of which is in the parish of Great Hautbois. Here is a brewery; and a considerable trade is carried on in malt, corn, coal, and timber, for which the river affords facility of conveyance. A fair for pedlery is held on Whit-Monday. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 2. 6., and in the patronage of King's College, Cambridge: the tithes of this parish, with those upon certain lands in South Ruston and Scottow, have been commuted for £340, and the glebe contains about 27 acres. The church, chiefly in the early style, has a lofty embattled tower; the nave is separated from the chancel by a carved screen; the font is Norman, and the interior contains several neat memorials. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. John Chapman, in 1718, bequeathed £10 per annum and a house, to which, in 1815, the Rev. Chas. Grape, D.D., added the interest on £360 three per cent. consols., making the income £20. 16., for teaching boys.

COLTON (St. Andrew), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of FOREHOE, E. division of NORFOLK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Norwich; containing 282 inhabitants. The parish, which is bounded on the south by a stream tributary to the river Yare, forms part of the manor of Costessey, and comprises 900*a.* 2*r.* 29*p.*, whereof about 726 acres are arable, and 169 pasture. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 9. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £348: there are 25 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres of glebe. The church is in the later English style, with a square embattled tower. The Rev. Henry Rix, in 1726, bequeathed land for the endowment of a school and other charitable purposes, the income of which, with a subsequent gift, amounts to £15. 10.; and the poor receive £17. 5. per annum from ten acres of land allotted for fuel, at the inclosure, in 1801.

COLTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of LICHFIELD, S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (N. by E.) from Rugeley; containing 672 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the north by the river Blythe, and on the south by the Trent, comprises by computation 3000 acres, and the Grand Trunk canal passes through its south-western part. A fair is held in June, for horses and cattle, and is numerously attended. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5; net income, £461; patron, Rev. C. Landor. The glebe comprises 40 acres. The church is an ancient structure, with a square tower; the north aisle was rebuilt about 45 years since. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a school founded by contributions in 1763, and since endowed with £500 by the late John Spencer, Esq.; and a school for younger children, endowed by the late Mr. Webb, with land producing £5 per annum.

COLTON, a township, in the parish of BOLTON-PERCY, W. division of AINSTY wapentake, W. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from York; containing 142 inhabitants. It comprises about 1120 acres of land, of which the greater portion is arable. The York and North-Midland railway passes through the township, and at a short distance west of the village is the road from York to Tadcaster. A neat mansion here was occupied by the late John Bacon Sawrey Morrilt, Esq., the proprietor of Rokeby, in the county, and intimate friend of Sir Walter Scott. A school was endowed by Mr. Morrilt with an annuity of £6, and is further supported by the rector.

COLUMB-DAVID, a tything, in the parish and hundred of HEMYOCK, union of WELLINGTON, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Wellington.

COLUMB, ST., MAJOR (St. COLUMBA), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of PYDER, E. division of CORNWALL, 32 miles (S. W. by W.) from Launceston, and 245 (W. by S.) from London; containing 3146 inhabitants, of whom 1337 are in the town. This place takes its name from an ancient church erected by the founder of Bodmin priory, and dedicated to St. Columba, and its adjunct to distinguish it from a smaller town of that name in the same hundred. The town is situated on the summit of an eminence, supposed to have been occupied as a Danish fortification, and is surrounded by extensive tracts of fine meadow land; the streets are roughly paved, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water. A copper-mine, called Wheal Constance, was opened a few years since, in which a fine vein of cobalt has been discovered; and there are several stream-works in the parish. The market, granted to Sir John Arundel in 1333, by Edward III., is on Thursday, for corn and provisions; and there is also a market for butchers' meat only, on Saturday: the market-house is an ancient building. The fairs are on the Thursday after Mid-Lent Sunday, for cattle and sheep, and on the Thursday after Nov. 13th, for sheep only. The county magistrates hold a petty-session for the eastern division of the hundred, on the first Tuesday in every month.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £53. 6. 8., and in the patronage of E. Walker, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £1500, and the glebe contains 30 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is an ancient and venerable structure, with a lofty square embattled tower, crowned by pinnacles; within are several interesting monuments. There are places of worship for Bryanites, Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists; also a Roman Catholic chapel at Llanherne. A school is partly supported by subscription. In 1628, James Jenkins, Esq., gave by will £200, which have been invested in the purchase of land, producing £73 per annum, for distribution among the poor. The union comprises 16 parishes or places, and contains a population of 16,167. The curious Druical circles, called the Hurlers, are in the neighbourhood. About two miles to the south-east of the town is a large elliptical encampment, called Castle an Dinas, defended by a double vallum, and having only one entrance; the longer diameter of the inner area is 1700 feet, and the shorter 1500; within it are two tumuli, one of which is surrounded by a small ditch. It is supposed to have been erected by the Danes, and to have been the residence of one of their chiefs. At the distance of a mile and a half, in the same direction, is a fine cromlech, covered with ivy; and three miles to the north-east, on the road to Wade-bridge, are nine upright stones, called "the Nine Maidens."

COLUMB, ST., MINOR (St. COLUMB), a parish, in the union of ST. COLUMB MAJOR, hundred of PYDER, E. division of CORNWALL, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from St. Columb Major; containing 1681 inhabitants. The parish comprises 5535 acres, and is bounded on the west by the bays of Towan and Watergate, in which are the small harbours of New Quay and Porth, on the Bristol Channel: the cliffs on this part of the coast are very lofty, and over them proceeds a narrow path, which descends to a fine sandy beach, stretching to Mawgan Porth, and in the rocks are many curious caverns, formed by the action of the sea. The pilchard fishery is carried on extensively at New Quay, where a harbour has been formed for the vessels employed in that concern, in which the principal part of the population is either interested or engaged. Lead-ore is found in several parts, and three mines have been opened, of which two, at New Quay and Narrow Cliff, are still worked with moderate success; but the third, at Watergate, after a large outlay in the buildings and machinery, has been abandoned. There are also quarries of slate-stone, well adapted for common building purposes, and a quarry of stone, partaking of the properties of granite, which is much valued. A fair for cattle is held on the 9th of June, and is one of the chief cattle fairs in the county. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £117; patron and impropiator, Sir J. B. Y. Buller, Bart. The church is a spacious and ancient structure, with a very lofty tower; the roof is of oak. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Baptists. John Francis Buller gave £5 per annum for teaching children, and, in 1782, John Martyn a like amount. There are considerable remains of Rialton priory, formerly a cell to the priory of Bodmin, built by Thomas Vivian, prior of Bodmin, about the close of the 15th century; they consist of the entrance archways leading into three courts, which are embattled and mantled with ivy. There are also some earthworks, whereof the principal are at Porth Island; and several barrows, in one of which, on a farm at Tretharas, five urns containing bones were found a few years since.

COLVESTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SWAFFHAM, hundred of GRIMSHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Brandon; containing 42 inhabitants. It lies near the road from Brandon to Swaffham, and comprises 800 acres, the property of Lord Berners, by whose family the manor has long been held. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with the vicarage of Didlington, and valued in the king's books at £9. 0. 2½: the church, which was dependent on that of St. Bartholomew at Ickburgh, was, with the village, long since demolished.

COLWALL (St. James), a parish, in the union of LEDDBURY, hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Ledbury; containing 940 inhabitants. This parish is supposed to have derived its name from a corruption of Collis Vallum, "a fortified hill," which is descriptive of the situation of the place. The Herefordshire beacon, an ancient encampment on one of the highest of the Malvern hills, and the lines of the circumvallation of which are still very distinct, is thought to have been formed by the Britons to repel the Romans, and some antiquaries are of opinion that here Caractacus was taken prisoner. Near the place a coronet of gold was discovered in 1650, said by some to have belonged to a British prince; the gold alone was worth £1000. The parish is bounded on the north and east by a portion of the county of Worcester, and is traversed by the two roads from Malvern to Ledbury, the one through Malvern-Wells, and the other through the Wyche; it comprises 3458a. 3r. 26p. Limestone is quarried, which, as well as other strata, contains fossil remains; and common stone is quarried for roads and buildings. From forty to fifty people are employed in glove-making. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Bishop of Hereford: the tithes have been commuted for £480; there is an excellent glebe-house, and the glebe contains 61 acres. The church, which has 150 free sittings, is an ancient structure, with a handsome square tower, and contains portions in the early and decorated English styles. There is a place of worship for a sect called the Plymouth Brethren. Here is a free grammar school, founded in 1612, by Humphry Walwyn, and under the patronage of the Grocers' Company.

COLWELL, with SWINBURN, a township, in the parish of CHOLLERTON, union of HEXHAM, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Hexham; containing 393 inhabitants. Colwell, Great and Little Swinburn, and Whiteside Law are contiguous townships in the parish, situated near the intersection of the Cambo road and the Watling-street, and belonging to Thomas Riddell, Esq., who has an elegant modern mansion on the site of the ancient castle of Great Swinburn.

COLWICH (St. Michael), a parish, in the S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, union, and N. division of the county, of STAFFORD, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from Rugeley; containing, with Fradswell chapelry, and the townships of Bishton, Colwich, Moreton, Shugborough, and Wolseley, and part of those of Drointon, Great and Little Haywood, and Hixon, 2015 inhabitants, of whom 205 are in the township of Colwich. This parish, which is situated on the banks of the Trent, and intersected by the road from London to Liverpool, comprises by measurement 6492 acres: there are two quarries from which a durable stone is obtained for building. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal forms a junction with the Grand Trunk canal near Great Haywood, in the parish. A fair for cattle is held at Wolseley, on the Wednesday before Mid-Lent Sunday. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 0. 5.; patron, Bishop of Lichfield; appropriator, Prebendary of Colwich, in Lichfield Cathedral: the great tithes have been commuted for £700, and the vicarial for £500; the glebe consists of about 6 acres, $4\frac{1}{2}$ of which are in the parish of Stowe. The church is of some antiquity, and contains a monument to the memory of the celebrated navigator, George, Lord Anson, who was interred in the family cemetery at this place, June 14th, 1762. At Fradswell is an endowed chapel; also a place of worship for Independents, and a Roman Catholic chapel attached to a nunnery. A parochial school was built and endowed by Miss Sparrow. The remains of Haywood Abbey, situated in the parish, have been converted into a farm-house.

COLWICK (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of BASFORD, S. division of the wapentake of THURGARTON and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Nottingham; containing 109 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the river Trent, comprises by computation 1235 acres; the surface is varied, the soil on the hills is a strong clay, and the remainder rich pasture and meadow land. The manor is the property of John Musters, Esq., who has a splendid manor-house here; the village is pleasantly situated under a long range of hills on the north bank of the Trent. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 1. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £220; patron, Mr. Musters. The church, which stands embosomed in foliage, contains some ancient monuments of the Byron and Musters families.

COLYFORD, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of COLYTON, Honiton and S. divisions of DEVON, 1 mile (S. S. E.) from Colyton. This place was made a borough before the reign of Edward I., and is still governed by a mayor, who is annually chosen at the court of the lord of the manor. The corporation consists of the mayor and burgesses; and the mayor, who holds office for one year, and is constable the next, is possessed of a small field, and has the tolls of a well-attended cattle-fair, held on the first Wednesday after March 12th. The road from Exeter to Weymouth runs through the village. There are lands still called Chapel Lands, but the existence of the chapel is known only by tradition: the great tithes within the limits of the borough belong to the vicar of Colyton. A Roman road passed through the place, the remains of which are sometimes dug up. Sir T. Gates, who discovered the Bermuda Isles, was born here.

COLYTON, or CULLITON (St. Andrew), a market-town and parish, in the union of AXMINSTER, hundred of COLYTON, Honiton and S. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (S. W.) from Axminster, and 151 (W. S. W.) from London; containing 2451 inhabitants. This place derives its name from the river Coly, on which it is situated, near the confluence of that stream with the Axe. In the reign of Edward III. it obtained the grant of a weekly market and an annual fair. During the civil war, the royal forces in possession of the town were attacked and defeated by a detachment of the parliamentary army stationed at Lyme. The town is pleasantly seated in a fertile vale on the road between Axminster and Sidmouth, surrounded by fine pasture land and orchards, and abounding with excellent timber; the houses, many of which are very ancient, are in general irregularly built of flint, with thatched roofs; the inhabitants are supplied with water from two conduits connected with springs a little south of the town. The principal branch of manufacture is that of paper, which is at present on a reduced scale, there being but one establishment, in which only ten persons are employed : there is also a tan-yard giving employment to about thirty hands. The market is on Thursday, and there are smaller markets on Tuesday and Saturday. Two small fairs are held under the controul of feoffees, granted by charter of Henry VIII. ; one on the first Thursday after the 1st of May, and the other on the first Thursday after the 14th of October ; and there is likewise a fair at Colyford on the first Wednesday after the 12th of March. The petty-sessions for the division are held here ; and two constables and a tythingman are annually appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor.

The parish comprises by computation 8000 acres of land. The LIVING is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of Monkton and Shute annexed, valued in the king's books at £40. 10. 10. ; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The great tithes have been commuted for £600, and the vicarial for £460, and there is a glebe of about an acre, to which is attached a glebe-house. The church is a spacious and handsome cruciform structure, in the later English style, with a low square embattled tower rising from the centre, surmounted by a handsome octagonal lantern turret with pierced parapets : the aisles have been widened to include the transepts, and now destroy the cruciform arrangement. In the chancel is a beautiful altar-tomb, with the effigy of the daughter of one of the Courtenays, Earls of Devon, richly enshrined in tabernacle work ; and in the angles north and south of the chancel are the sepulchral chapels of the Poles, and of the extinct family of Yonge ; the Poles' chapel is separated from the church by an exquisitely carved screen. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians. A school is supported out of a general fund arising from an endowment in land, by Henry VIII. ; the land, worth about £300 per annum, was part of the property of Henry Courtenay, Marquess of Exeter, who was executed February 14th, 1539. A Sunday school is supported partly by an endowment of £200, producing £7. 7. per annum, given in 1816 by the Rev. James How. The ruins of Colcombe Castle, formerly the seat of the Courtenays have been converted into a farm-house.

COLYTON-RAWLEIGH (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of ST. THOMAS, hundred of EAST BUDLEIGH, Woodbury and S. divisions of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Otterton ; containing 841 inhabitants. This place, according to tradition, derived the adjunct to its name from the great Sir Walter Raleigh, to whom the manor is said to have formerly belonged. It is situated on the river Otter, and intersected by the road from Honiton to Exmouth, and comprises by computation 3500 acres, of which 500 are open downs ; the soil is generally light and gravelly, and the surface is varied with hill and dale. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 4. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$. ; net income, £401 ; patron and appropriator, the Dean of Exeter ; the glebe comprises 45 acres, and the glebe-house is a handsome residence, built by the incumbent, at an expense of £1200. The church is an ancient structure. There is a place of worship for Baptists ; and a school is supported by subscription.

COMBE, with WESTINGTON, a hamlet, in the parish of CHIPPING-CAMPDEN, union of SHIPSTON-ON-STOUR, Upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Chipping-Campden ; containing 178 inhabitants. It forms a deep valley between the hills which surround Chipping-Campden on the west and south, and was anciently a lordship, granted by Hugh, surnamed Kevilliock, Earl of Chester, to the abbey of Bordesley.

COMBE, a tything, in the parish of WOTTON-UNDER-EDGE, union of DURSLEY, Upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 1 mile (N. E. by E.) from Wotton ; containing, with Simond's-Hall, 576 inhabitants.

COMBE, a tything, in the parish and hundred of CREWKERNE, union of CHARD, W. division of SOMERSET ; containing 74 inhabitants.

COMBE (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of CHARD, E. division of the hundred of KINGSBURY, W. division of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Chard ; containing 1293 inhabitants. It comprises 4203a. 1r. 7p., of which about 2007 acres are pasture, meadow, and orchard, 2031 arable, and 52 wood. Fairs are held on June 18th, and on the Wednesday before December 11th. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15. 4. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$. ; patron and appropriator, Dean of Wells. The great tithes have been commuted for £315, and the vicarial for £440 ; the glebe contains 13 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church has been recently repaired, and the gallery enlarged. A national school is supported by subscription.

COMBE (St. SWITHIN), a parish, in the union of HUNGERFORD, hundred of PASTROW, Kingsclere and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 6 miles (E. by S.) from Hungerford ; containing, with the hamlet of East Wick, 203 inhabitants. The parish is situated at the head of a valley, stretching towards Hurstbourne-Tarrant, and at the south base of Wallborough Hill, belonging to the chain of the north downs ; it comprises by measurement 2074 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4. ; patrons, Dean and Canons of Windsor ; impropiators, Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge. The church, which is very ancient, and was formerly much larger, was originally attached to a monastic establishment in the vicinity, the remains whereof have lately been converted into a farm-house. Round the summit of Wallborough Hill are a fosse and mound, marking the site of a Roman or British encampment.

COMBE, a tything, in the parish of ENFORD, union of PEWSEY, hundred of ELSTUB and EVERLEY, Everley and Pewsey, and S. divisions of WILTS, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Ludgershall ; containing 79 inhabitants.

COMBE, ABBAS.—See ABBAS-COMBE.

COMBE, ENGLISH, a parish, in the union of BATH, hundred of WELLOW, E. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (S. W.) from Bath ; containing 486 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises by computation 1796 acres, is situated near the Great Western railway, and about two miles from the London and Exeter road, from the river Avon, and the Kennet and Avon navigation : there are several quarries, from which stone is obtained for building and the repair of roads. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 3. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Rev. Charles Radford : the impropriate tithes, belonging to Mrs. Salisbury, have been commuted for £187, and the vicarial for £170 ; the glebe contains about 15 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a very handsome structure, and has recently been repaired at a considerable expense. There are places of worship for Baptists and Lady Huntingdon's Connexion; and a school is supported by the vicar. Here was formerly a castle, the property of the family of Gurnay, but little more than the fosse which encompassed it is visible. The ancient road Wansdyke crosses the parish, passing by an eminence called Roundbarrow, or Barrow Hill, which has been erroneously considered of artificial construction.

COMBE-FIELDS, or COMBE-ABBEY, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of RUGBY, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Coventry; containing 195 inhabitants, and comprising 3656 acres. It is well watered by two branches of the river Sow, which partly bound it on the east and west; the Oxford canal winds through the district; and it is also intersected by the road from Coventry to Lutterworth. Richard de Camvilla, in 1150, founded here a Cistercian abbey, which was dedicated to St. Mary, and richly endowed: at the Dissolution it contained about fourteen monks, and was valued at £343. 0. 5. per annum: the site, which was granted by Edward VI. to the Earl of Warwick, is occupied by the manor-house: there are still some vestiges of the cloisters.

COMBE-FLOREY (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of TAUNTON, hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, W. division of SOMERSET, 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from Wiveliscombe; containing 304 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1600 acres: there are quarries of sandstone and conglomerate of good quality, for building. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 13. 9., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £220, and a rent-charge of £44 is paid to an impropiator; the glebe comprises 70 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a neat plain edifice. A parochial school is supported by subscription.

COMBE-HAY, a parish, in the union of BATH, hundred of WELLOW, E. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Bath; containing 239 inhabitants. The parish is delightfully situated in a well-wooded vale, and comprises by measurement 1080 acres; the surface in some parts is hilly, and the soil in these is a light stone brash, but in the valleys fertile; the district abounds with fine timber, and the scenery is richly embellished. Stone of inferior quality is quarried for building cottages, and for the roads; and fullers'-earth is found in abundance. A small brook flows through the parish into the Avon, and the Somersetshire Coal canal also intersects it. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 12. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of H. Hanbury Tracey, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £240, and the glebe comprises 38 acres. The church is a neat edifice. There is a place of worship alternately for Baptists and Independents; and a school is supported by a few individuals. Mrs. Leigh bequeathed £200 to the poor, the interest of which is distributed among them. The Roman Fosse-way passes near the place; the ditch on each side is here very perfect.

COMBE-HILL, with HEALY, a township, in the parish of NETHER WITTON, union of ROTHBURY, W. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUM-BERLAND, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Rothbury; containing 36 inhabitants. Combe-hill is the name of a farmhouse, which has several conical hillocks, apparently diluvial, between it and the Combe-bridge, which stands across the river Font, where the bank is on one side steep, and dark with wood, and on the other has a haugh and rising ground scattered with old thorns, hollies, and natural wood.

COMBE, LONG (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of WOODSTOCK, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (W. by S.) from Woodstock; containing 605 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the patronage of Lincoln College, Oxford, the impropiators; net income, £90. The church is in the early English style, with a square embattled tower, having angular pinnacles surmounted by vanes; it contains some interesting details, and near the stone steps leading to the rood-loft is a stone pulpit, finely sculptured. It anciently occupied a very low situation, but was rebuilt on its present site in 1395.

COMBE-MARTIN (St. PETER), a market-town and parish, in the union of BARNSTAPLE, hundred of BRAUNTON, Brainton and N. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (E.) from Ilfracombe, and 176 (W. by S.) from London; containing 1399 inhabitants. This place derives its name from its situation in a deep valley, and its adjunct from its proprietor at the time of the Conquest. In the reign of Edward I., some mines of lead, containing a considerable portion of silver, were discovered, and 377 men from the Peak in Derbyshire were brought to work them: in the reign of Edward III. they produced such a quantity of that metal as to assist the king materially in defraying the expense of carrying on the war with France. These mines, after remaining in a neglected state for many years, were re-opened in the reign of Elizabeth, and worked with considerable advantage under the direction of Sir Bevis Bulmer. They were unsuccessfully explored in 1790: in 1813 a more profitable attempt was made, which, after four years, however, was discontinued: the works have been since renewed, and the mines are at present in operation. Some iron and copper are also found, and limestone is quarried and burnt for agricultural use to a great extent. There is a variety of geological productions in one of the hills, as well as numerous fossils. The town is situated in a deep romantic glen, extending in a north-west direction, and opening into a small cove on the Bristol Channel, which is capable of being converted into a good harbour, and which formed a convenient port for shipping the mineral produce, and still affords the inhabitants the means of conveying coal and lime to other towns, whence they receive corn and bark in return. The houses, many of which are in ruins, and overgrown with ivy, extend for nearly a mile, in an irregular line, along the side of the vale; the surrounding scenery is strikingly magnificent. The market has been discontinued; but the charter, granted to Nicholas Fitz-Martin by Henry III., in 1264, is still retained by the exposure of some trifling articles for sale on the market days: the market-house is rapidly falling to decay. Fairs are held on Whit-Monday and Lammas feast; and the county magistrates hold a petty-session for the division, on the first Monday in every month, at a small inn. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £39. 8. 9., and in the gift of the Rev. Humphrey Toms: the tithes amount to about £400 per annum, and the glebe contains 60 acres, attached to which is a glebe-house. The church is a handsome structure, with a fine tower, and was built about the time of Henry III.; the nave is separated from the chancel by a screen. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Independents. A school was endowed, in 1733, by George Ley, Esq., with land producing £25 per annum: the premises were rebuilt a few years since, by George Ley, Esq., grandson of the founder. Another school is in union with the National Society. There are three rings of stone on the summit of one of the hills in the parish, called Hangman-Hill, the height of which is 1189 feet. Dr. Thomas Harding, a learned Roman Catholic divine and controversialist, was born here in 1512.

COMBE, MONCTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of BATH, hundred of BATH-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Bath; containing 1107 inhabitants. The manufacture of paper is carried on; and on Combe Down are extensive quarries, where stone was obtained for erecting many of the best houses in Bath: clusters of hexagonal brown crystals are found in the cavities of the stone, and in the fissures of the rocks are some fine and curiously frosted stalactites. The living is annexed to the rectory of South Stoke. On the brow of the hill which surmounts the village, and forming a conspicuous feature in the landscape, an elegant chapel, in the decorated English style, with a tower and spire, 90 feet high, has been lately erected by voluntary contributions. A national school is supported by subscription.

COMBEINTEIGNHEAD, a parish, in the union of NEWTON-ABBOT, hundred of WONFORD, Teignbridge and S. divisions of DEVON, 3 miles (E.) from Newton-Bushell; containing 425 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the navigable river Teign, by which it is bounded on the north. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £32. 2. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of J. W. Harding and W. Long, Esqrs.: the tithes have been commuted for £350, and the glebe comprises 42 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church contains an ancient wooden screen. The church-house, now occupied by the poor, is of very early foundation. A school was founded by Margaret Burgoyne, in 1783, with an endowment of £100 stock.

COMBERBACH, a township, in the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH, union of NORTHWICH, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Northwich; containing 303 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

COMBERTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CHESTERTON, hundred of WETHERLEY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Cambridge; containing 520 inhabitants. An act for inclosing lands was passed in 1839. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 18. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Jesus' College, Cambridge: the appropriate tithes, belonging to the Bishop of Ely, have been commuted for £328. 15., and the vicarial for £104; the appropriate glebe consists of 186 acres, and the vicarial contains nearly 6 acres.

COMBERTON, GREAT (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and Upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Pershore; containing 215 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the river Avon, comprises about 940 acres: there are quarries of oolite, in which are embedded various fossils, and which is used for common purposes; and a blue clay is also found. A quay has been constructed at this place. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £254; patron and incumbent, Rev. Charles Hubert Parker. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1818. The church is an ancient structure, apparently built at different periods. Schools are supported by subscription.

COMBERTON, LITTLE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union and Upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 2 miles (S. E. by S.) from Pershore; containing 229 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 758 acres: there is abundance of gravel, which is dug for the roads, and in the beds are found numerous fossil shells and other remains. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 0. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £258; patron and incumbent, Rev. William Parker. The tithes were commuted for land and a money-payment in 1803. The church is an ancient structure, and has been recently repaired. A school is chiefly supported by the rector.

COMB-PYNE, a parish, in the union and hundred of AXMINSTER, Honiton and S. divisions of DEVON, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Colyton; containing 143 inhabitants. This place was anciently called Comb-Coffin, from the Coffin family; its present adjunct is derived from the Pynes, its later possessors. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 11. 8.; net income, £127; patrons, Messrs. Knight, Cuff, and Edwards.

COMB-RAWLEIGH (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of HONITON, hundred of AXMINSTER, Honiton and S. divisions of DEVON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. N. W.) from Honiton; containing 276 inhabitants. This parish, which is separated from that of Honiton by the river Otter, comprises 1740a. 3r. 2p., and is intersected by the old road to Taunton. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 0. 10., and in the gift of E. Simeon Drewe, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £300, and the glebe comprises 40 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a handsome structure, in the later English style, and contains a monument to the memory of John Sheldon, Esq., F.R.S., and anatomical professor, who died in 1808. A school is supported by subscription.

COMBROOK, a chapelry, in the parish of KINGTON, union of STRATFORD-UPON-AVON, Kington division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Kington; containing 282 inhabitants, and comprising 1137 acres. The tithes were commuted for land in 1772. The chapel, dedicated to St. Margaret, has been rebuilt. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school, endowed by a late Lord Willoughby, with £5 per annum, is further supported by Lord Willoughby de Broke. In 1763, Lady Tryphena Verney, agreeably to a bequest of £300 by her husband, George Verney, Esq., conveyed an estate for the maintenance of two scholars at Trinity College, Cambridge, to be chosen from this school, or, in default, out of the grammar school at Warwick.

COMBS (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of Stow, W. division of Suffolk, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. by E.) from Stow-Market; containing 1064 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Bury-St. Edmund's to Ipswich, and on the river Orwell, which forms its north-eastern boundary, and is navigable from Ipswich to Stow-Market: it comprises by measurement 2770 acres; the soil is generally a strong clay, but near the river light, and inclined to moor; the surface is very uneven, rising into hills of considerable elevation; the lower grounds afford excellent pasture. A large tannery, which has been established for more than 150 years, is carried on. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £25. 17. 8½., and in the gift of the Earl of Ashburnham, with a net income of £511: the glebe comprises 30 acres, and a handsome rectory-house has been built by the Rev. Richard Daniel. The church is in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower; the windows retain some fine portions of ancient stained glass. There is a place of worship for Independents.

COMMON-DALE, a township, in the parish and union of Guisborough, E. division of the liberty of Langbaugh, N. riding of York, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Guisborough; containing 79 inhabitants. The name of this place is corrupted from Colman-dale, so called from Colman, Bishop of Lindisfarne, who had a hermitage here. It was given to the priory of Guisborough by the founder, and continued with that establishment until the Dissolution, when it passed to the Chaloner family, by whom the lands were afterwards divided and sold. The township is in the district called Cleveland, occupying the south part of the parish, and is a narrow secluded vale, surrounded by high and heathy moors, and comprises by computation 2630 acres of land, mostly the property of the Viscount Downe. In the township is the hamlet of Skelderskew Grange, which anciently belonged to the priory of Basedale, and which probably derives its name from skell, a rivulet, and skew, wood-ground standing on a hill, terms strongly characteristic of the position of the hamlet.

COMP, GREAT, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of Wrotham, union of Malling, lathe of Aylesford, W. division of Kent, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Wrotham. Here was formerly a chapel.

COMPSTALL, a village, in the parish and union of Stockport, hundred of Macclesfield, N. division of the county of Chester, 5 miles from Stockport. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in spinning, power-loom weaving, bleaching, and printing, and the remainder principally at extensive coal-works in the neighbourhood. Thirty-five years since, Compstall consisted of only a few straggling cottages, but since the establishment of the cotton-manufacture, it has been gradually rising to its present thriving condition. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and two schools are in union with the National Society.

COMPTON (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of Wantage, hundred of Compton, county of Berks, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from East Ilsley; containing 544 inhabitants, and comprising by admeasurement 3600 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 14. 4½.; net income, £330; patron, John Thomas Wasey, Esq.; impropriators, Rev. James Best and Messrs. Palmer.

COMPTON, a hamlet, in the parish of Ashbourn, hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, though locally in the hundred of AppleTree, S. division of the county of Derby, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (S. E.) from Ashbourn. A chapel, called Sion Chapel, with six almshouses attached to it, under the direction of the trustees of the Countess of Huntingdon's College, was built here by John Cooper, who, by deed in 1801, endowed them with £4500 three per cent. reduced annuities, yielding a dividend of about £130 per annum. The premises were repaired in 1824.

COMPTON, a tything, in the parish and union of Newent, hundred of Botloe, W. division of the county of Gloucester; containing 504 inhabitants.

COMPTON, a tything, in the parish of Henbury, union of Clifton, Upper division of the hundred of Henbury, W. division of the county of Gloucester; containing 144 inhabitants.

COMPTON (All Saints), a parish, in the union of Winchester, hundred of Buddlesgate, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of Southampton, 2 miles (S. S. W.) from Winchester; containing 304 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the London and Southampton road, and comprises by measurement 2099 acres; and the Itchen navigation and the London and South-Western railway pass through it. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £23. 6. 8.; net income, £329; patron, Bishop of Winchester. The church, which is small, has portions in various styles, the Norman predominating, and contains a handsome monument, by Westmacott, to Dr. Huntingford, Bishop of Hereford, and Warden of Winchester College. A national school is supported by subscription.

COMPTON, a liberty, in the parish of Tettenhall-Regis, union of Seisdon, N. division of the hundred of Seisdon, S. division of the county of Stafford; containing 641 inhabitants.

COMPTON (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of Guildford, First division of the hundred of Godalming, W. division of Surrey, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Guildford; containing 522 inhabitants. It extends to the top of the chalk hill from Guildford to Farnham; the soil is chalk, sand, and a little clay. The Hog's Back runs through the parish, and commands fine views of the surrounding country. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 4. 9½.; patron and impropriator, Rev. George M. Molyneux: the tithes have been commuted for £421. 15., and the glebe contains nearly 72 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church has a low tower and spire, and a curious chancel, with a groined roof, and a chapel over it; these portions are in the early English style, but there are others of decorated character. A school is supported by subscription. Dr. Edward Fulham, who attended Charles II. during his exile, and was the first canon of Windsor appointed after the Restoration, was born here in 1604.

COMPTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of Westbourne, hundred of Westbourne, and Singleton, rape of Chichester, W. division of Sussex, 10 miles (N. W.) from Chichester; containing 274 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the west by the county of Southampton, and the village is situated on one of the roads from Petersfield to Chichester. The living is a vicarage, endowed with a small portion of the rectorial tithes, with Up-Marden annexed, and valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8.; patron, and impropiator of the remainder of the rectorial tithes, M. R. Langdale, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £130, and the vicarial for £131, and the glebe comprises 4 acres. The church is in the early and decorated English styles, and contains some neat monuments to the families of Peckham and Phipps. Edward Flower, in 1521, founded a free grammar school, with an endowment of £100, to be laid out in land: Thomas Pelham gave £80, with a rent-charge of £20, and, in 1528, William Spicer conveyed lands in furtherance of the charity, the total income of which amounts to £28.

COMPTON, a tything, in the parish of ENFORD, union of PEWSEY, hundred of ELSTUB and EVERLEY, Everley and Pewsey, and S. divisions of WILTS; containing 73 inhabitants.

COMPTON-ABBAS, or WEST COMPTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of DORCHESTER, hundred of CERNE, TOTCOMBE, and MODBURY, Dorchester division of DORSET, 9 miles (W. N. W.) from Dorchester; containing 91 inhabitants. It derives the adjunct to its name from having once formed part of the possessions of Milton Abbey. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 0. 5.; net income, £191; patron, R. Williams, Esq.

COMPTON-ABBAS (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SHAFTESBURY, hundred of SIXPENNY-HANDLEY, Shaston division of DORSET, 3½ miles (S. by E.) from Shaftesbury; containing 439 inhabitants. This parish, which derives its name from the situation of the village in a combe or vale, and its adjunct from its annexation to Shaston Abbey, lies on the road from Shaftesbury to Blandford Forum, and comprises by measurement 1300 acres: there are some quarries of green sandstone used for building. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 16. 2½., and in the gift of Sir R. P. Glyn, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £350. The church is a small ancient edifice, with a tower, on the summit of which is a pear-tree in full vigour.

COMPTON-ABDALE (St. OSWALD), a parish, in the union of NORTHLEACH, hundred of BRADLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4¼ miles (W. N. W.) from Northleach; containing 260 inhabitants. The river Coln runs through the parish, which is well wooded. The living is a perpetual curacy, net income, £78; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The church is a small ancient building.

COMPTON-BASSET (St. SWITHIN), a parish, in the union and hundred of CALNE, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, 2¼ miles (E. N. E.) from Calne; containing 498 inhabitants. It comprises by estimation 2236 acres; the surface is pleasingly varied with hill and dale; the soil on the hills is chalky, but in the vale a rich clay. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 10½., and in the gift of the Bishop of Salisbury: the tithes have been commuted for £572. 16. 6., out of which £12 are paid to the vicar of Calne, and 16s. 6d. to the treasurer of Salisbury Cathedral; the glebe comprises 45 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. A school is supported by Mrs. Heneage, and another by Mr. Heneage and the rector.

COMPTON-BEAUCHAMP (St. SWITHIN), a parish, in the union of FARRINGDON, hundred of SHRIVENHAM, county of BERKS, 6½ miles (S. by W.) from Great Farringdon; containing, with the hamlet of Knighton, 157 inhabitants. It is intersected by the Great Western railway, and situated near the Wilts and Berks canal, which passes along its northern border. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 18. 9., and in the patronage of Mrs. Wright: the tithes have been commuted for £338, and the glebe comprises 22½ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. A school is supported by subscription. Here is an extensive double-trenched encampment, thought to be Roman, from the coins discovered upon the spot, near which passes the Ikeneld road.

COMPTON-BISHOP (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of WINTERSTOKE, E. division of SOMERSET, 2¼ miles (W. N. W.) from Axbridge; containing 802 inhabitants. It is intersected by the Bristol and Exeter road and the river Axe, and comprises 1709a. 2r. 2p.: there is a good supply of excellent limestone in the hills. The village is situated in a hollow, under the southern declivity of the Mendip range, presenting a very picturesque appearance: the village of Cross, in the parish, is a station of the General Post-Office. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11; patron and appropriator, Prebendary of Compton-Bishop, in the Cathedral of Wells: the great tithes have been commuted for £71. 2., and the vicarial for £203. 17.; the rectorial glebe contains 82½ acres, and the vicar's nearly 7 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church has a handsome stone pulpit, and the exterior arch of the porch is in the Norman style: in the churchyard is an ancient cross. A parochial school is supported partly by a bequest of William Cray, in 1728. A little to the south-west of Compton is a spacious natural cave, entered by a perpendicular shaft; and proceeding by a difficult winding passage, a still more extensive cavern opens to the sight: from the roof, which expands into a kind of arch, hung formerly some beautiful specimens of stalactites; and various incrustations, assuming the most fantastic shapes, lay scattered about, but all have been defaced or removed by visitors.

COMPTON-CHAMBERLAIN (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WILTON, S. division of the hundred of DAMERHAM, S. division of WILTS, 8 miles (W.) from Salisbury; containing 350 inhabitants. It abounds with green sandstone, used for building. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13; net income, £99; patron and impropiator, J. H. Penruddock, Esq.: the rector is entitled to a rent-charge of £67. 12. out of the tithes of the parish of Tisbury. The church is an ancient cruciform structure, in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower on the south side, forming in the lower part a porch to the church. Colonel Penruddock, who was executed at Exeter, in 1655, for an attempt to restore Charles II. to the throne, resided in the parish.

COMPTON-DANDO (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of KEEPEHAM, E. division of SOMERSET, 2 miles (E. by N.) from Pensford; containing, with part of Woolard hamlet, 359 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Chew, and comprises 1845 acres by measurement: there are some quarries of stone, but of a quality fit only for the roughest buildings and for the roads. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 10. 5.; net income, £180; patron and appropriator, the Bishop of Bath and Wells: the glebe comprises 50 acres, with a house. The church is a handsome structure, in the decorated and later English styles, with a square embattled tower; at the north-east angle of the building is an enriched buttress, the lowest portion of which is formed of the remains of a Roman altar, displaying in one of its faces a statue of Hercules Pacificator, and in the other, one of Apollo. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A cold spring in the parish is slightly impregnated with iron. The Wansdyke traverses the parish in a north westerly direction.

COMPTON-DUNDON (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of LANGPORT, hundred of WHITLEY, W. division of SOMERSET, 2½ miles (N.) from Somerton; containing, with the tythings of Compton and Dundon, and the hamlet of Littleton, 679 inhabitants, of whom 355 are in Compton tything. It comprises 2568 acres, of which 1146 are arable, 1289 pasture, and 133 woodland. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 6. 10.; net income, £201; patron and appropriator, Prebendary of Compton-Dundon in the Cathedral of Wells. The church stands in the village of Dundon. The ruins of a mansion that formerly belonged to the family of Beauchamp adjoin the churchyard. An adjacent hill is called Dundon Beacon, from a beacon having anciently been erected on it.

COMPTON-DURVILLE, a tything, in the parish and hundred of SOUTH PETHERTON, union of YEOVIL, W. division of SOMERSET, 1½ mile (W. N. W.) from South Petherton; containing 136 inhabitants.

COMPTON, EAST and WEST, two tythings, in the parish of PILTON, union of SHEPTON-MALLET, hundred of WHITESTONE, E. division of SOMERSET, 2½ miles (S. S. W.) from Shepton-Mallet.

COMPTON, FENNY (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of SOUTHAM, Burton-Dasset division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 5¾ miles (E. by N.) from Kington; containing 615 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2077 acres, and contains within its limits some quarries of good building-stone: the Oxford canal passes through it. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 8. 4., and in the patronage of Corpus Christi College, Oxford: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1778; the glebe comprises 412 acres. The church is an ancient structure. A national school is supported by subscription. On the summit of Gredenton Hill, in the parish, are the remains of a British camp, in the form of a horse-shoe, 228 yards in length, defended with six lines of ramparts, between which were fosses round the steep declivity of the hill. Sir Henry Bate Dudley, a comic writer of some note, was born here in 1745.

COMPTON-GIFFORD, a tything, in the parish of CHARLES THE MARTYR, PLYMOUTH, union of PLYMPTON-ST. MARY, hundred of ROBOROUGH, Roborough and S. divisions of DEVON, 1½ mile (N. N. E.) from Plymouth; containing 271 inhabitants. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £225, of which £160 are payable to the vicar of St. Charles the Martyr's, and £65 to the vicar of St. Andrew's.

COMPTON-GREENFIELD, a parish, in the union of CLIFTON, Upper division of the hundred of HENBURY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 6¼ miles (N. by W.) from Bristol; containing 65 inhabitants. It comprises 650*a. 2r. 37p.*, of which 39½ acres are arable, and 610 pasture: the navigable river Severn flows on the western side. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7, and in the gift of Caius Lippencot, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £140, and the glebe contains 50 acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

COMPTON, LITTLE (St. Denis), a parish, in the union of CHIPPING-NORTON, Upper division of the hundred of DEERHURST, county of GLOUCESTER, though locally in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 4½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Chipping-Norton; containing 301 inhabitants. The parish adjoins that of Long Compton, in the county of Warwick, and within its limits is a spot of land which marks the junction of the shires of Gloucester, Oxford, Warwick, and Worcester; it comprises by computation 1600 acres, and the soil is chiefly clay, and rocky. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £66; patrons, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an inclosure act, in 1794. Here is an ancient mansion, which was formerly the residence of Bishop Juxon, chaplain to Charles I.

COMPTON, LONG (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of CHIPPING-NORTON, Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 4¼ miles (N. N. W.) from Chipping-Norton; containing, with the hamlet of Weston, 829 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from London to Birmingham, through Oxford, and comprises 3750*a. 2r. 11p.* It had formerly a weekly market and an annual fair, granted by Henry III. in the 15th of his reign, both of which are now disused: the village is a polling-place for the southern division of the county. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 15. 7½.; net income, £191; patrons and impropiators, Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The tithes were commuted for land in 1811; the glebe contains 125 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Independents, and a national school. About a mile southward is that remarkable monument of antiquity called Rolle-rich, or Rowright, stones.

COMPTON-MARTIN (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of CLUTTON, hundred of CHEWTON, E. division of SOMERSET, 8 miles (N.) from Wells; containing 601 inhabitants. This parish, anciently Coomb-Martin, is pleasantly situated on the north side of the Mendip Hills, and comprises by computation 2200 acres. The scenery is remarkable for its richness, variety, and beauty; and at Highfield, near the entrance of the village, is a view commanding a romantic and picturesque vale, extending to the Bristol Channel, with the mountains of Monmouthshire and Glamorganshire in the distance. The river Yeo has its source in the parish, issuing from a pond in the centre of the village; and the road from Bristol to Wells passes through the village. The living is a rectory, with that of Nempnett-Thrubwell annexed, valued in the king's books at £10. 6. 8.; patron and incumbent, the Rev. James Browne: the tithes have been commuted for rent-charges of £265 each, for Compton and Nempnett, and the glebe comprises 27 acres. The church is an ancient structure; the chancel is in the Norman, and the nave, aisles, and a private chapel, are of the later English, style.

COMPTON, NETHER (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union and hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of DORSET, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Sherborne; containing 456 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Over Compton annexed, valued in the king's books at £7. 16., and in the gift of John Goodden, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £243. 16. 3., and the glebe comprises 22 acres. There is a school, endowed with two cottages.

COMPTON, OVER (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of DORSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Sherborne; containing 151 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Nether Compton, and valued in the king's books at £11. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$.: the tithes have been commuted for £87. 3., and the glebe comprises $52\frac{1}{4}$ acres.

COMPTON-PAUNCEFOOT (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of CATSASH, E. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Wincanton; containing 256 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the road to Exeter, comprises 670*a*. 1*r*. 32*p*.: stone of good quality is quarried for building and other purposes. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 10. 10., and in the gift of the Heirs of John H. Hunt, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £175., and the glebe comprises about 35 acres of land. The church is a neat small edifice, with a tower surmounted by a neat spire. A school is aided by subscription.

COMPTON-SCORPION, a hamlet, in the parish of ILMINGTON, Kington division of the hundred of KINGTON, union of SHIPSTON-ON-STOUR, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 3 miles (W.) from Shipston. It is situated in a detached portion of the county, and is bounded on the west by a portion of Gloucestershire, and on the east by a part of Worcestershire.

COMPTON-VALLENCE (St. THOMAS à BECKET), a parish, in the union of DORCHESTER, liberty of FRAMP-TON, Dorchester division of DORSET, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Dorchester; containing 116 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 1500 acres: the village, which is situated on the banks of a small stream, appears to have been formerly more extensive than it is at present. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 5. $2\frac{1}{4}$., and in the gift of Robert Williams, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £237, and the glebe comprises 100 acres. The church, rebuilt in 1839, at the cost of the patron, is a handsome edifice, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower; the windows are embellished with stained glass. The rectory-house has been also rebuilt in a corresponding style. A parochial school is supported by the rector.

COMPTON-VERNEY, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of STRATFORD-ON-AVON, Kington division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 2 miles (N. W.) from Kington; containing 34 inhabitants, and comprising 165*S* acres. It lies near the road from Kington to Stratford.

COMPTON-WYNIATES, a parish, in the union of SHIPSTON-UPON-STOUR, Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Shipston; containing 46 inhabitants, and comprising 988 acres. The parish is situated on the border of Oxfordshire, which bounds it on the east. The living is a rectory, united to the vicarage of Tysoe, and valued in the king's books at £10. Of the manor-house, built by Sir William Compton, in the reign of Henry VIII., and visited by that monarch, there are some curious remains. Spencer Compton, the second earl of Northampton, and one of the most zealous adherents to Charles I., resided in this house, which was garrisoned by some parliamentary troops in 1646, in which year the church was destroyed.

CONDERTON, a hamlet, in the parish of OVERBURY, union of TEWKESBURY, Middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER; containing 131 inhabitants, and comprising 788 acres. It is nearly surrounded by a portion of the county of Gloucester.

CONDICOTE (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of STOW-ON-THE-WOLD, partly in the Upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, and partly in the Upper division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Stow; containing 165 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1237 acres: there are quarries of flag-stone of good quality. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 1. $0\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £158; patrons, Representatives of the late S. W. Bishop, Esq.: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1777. The church is a very ancient structure.

CONDOVER (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of ATCHAM, hundred of CONDOVER, S. division of SALOP, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Shrewsbury; containing 1550 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 7545 acres, about two-thirds of which are arable, and 790 acres are tithe-free; the soil is in some parts light and gravelly, in others a stiff clay, and in others good meadow land; the surface is undulated, and rather hilly; the lands are watered by a copious stream, called Condover brook, and there is a small lake named Bosmere, in and near which have been found several botanical plants not known elsewhere in England. Coal exists near the boundary of the parish, and a mine has been opened, and is now in operation. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 14.; patron and impropiator, E. W. Smythe Owen, Esq., of Condover Hall. The great tithes have been commuted for £1092, and the vicarial for £210; the glebe contains nearly 7 acres. John Pryce, Esq., in 1824, bequeathed £200, producing £6. 16. per annum, for teaching children; and a school is supported by Mr. Owen.

CONEYSTHORPE, a township, in the parish of BARTON-IN-THE-STREET, union of MALTON, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Whitwell; containing 170 inhabitants. The township comprises about 1150 acres, of which the soil is chiefly light, on a substratum of limestone; the surface is generally undulated, and the scenery in many situations very beautiful. A church, built in 1837, by the Earl of Carlisle, is a neat edifice with a campanile tower. A parochial school is supported by the Countess of Carlisle.

CONEYTHORPE, a township, in the parish of GOLDSBOROUGH, upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from KNARESBOROUGH; containing 118 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 800 acres of land, mostly the property of Lord Stourton. At this place is a large tumulus called Claro Hill, which either gives its name to, or receives it from, the wapentake of Claro, and on which, it is said, the councils of the wapentake were of old wont to be held. A parochial school is supported by subscription.

CONEY-WESTON, county of SUFFOLK.—See WESTON, CONEY.

CONGERSTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Market-Bosworth; containing 267 inhabitants. The parish comprises 587*a. 2r. 17p.*, which is rather more than a half of the whole lordship of Congerston; the surface is varied, and the soil, which is generally good, is well adapted in some parts for corn; a considerable portion of land is good meadow and pasture. The Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal flows through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 3. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Earl Howe, with a net income of £218; the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1822. Charles Jennings, in 1773, left £333. 6. 8. for teaching children; the school is in union with the National Society, and is also assisted by Earl and Countess Howe.

CONGHALL, or CAUGHALL, a township, in the union of GREAT BOUGHTON, parish of BACKFORD, Lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Chester; containing 16 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £61. 13. 3., of which £42. 13. 3. are payable to the Bishop of Chester, and £19 to the vicar. The Ellesmere canal passes near the place, and on the west runs the road from Chester to Birkenhead.

CONGHAM (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union and hundred of FREEBRIDGE-LYNN, W. division of NORFOLK, 7 miles (E. N. E.) from Lynn-Regis; containing 326 inhabitants. It comprises 2850*a. 2r. 22p.*, of which about 1887 acres are arable, 487 pasture, and 358 woods and plantations, the last chiefly in the vicinity of Congham Lodge: there is a sheep-walk consisting of 97 acres: the common was inclosed in 1812. The living is a rectory, with which that of Congham-St. Mary was consolidated in 1684, valued together in the king's books at £12. 10.; patron and incumbent, the Rev. J. Wright. The tithes have been commuted for £565, out of which £25 are payable to the rector of Roydon; the glebe comprises 35 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The living was endowed, in 1718, by Ellen Spelman, with lands then worth £53. 18. 6. per annum. The church of St. Mary has been demolished; that of St. Andrew is chiefly in the early style, and has a chapel on the north side. A school is supported by Miss Hamond; and John Bailey, in 1712, left £10 to the poor, who have also an allotment for fuel of about 19 acres. The learned antiquary and historian, Sir Henry Spelman, was born at this place, in 1561, and served as high sheriff of the county of Norfolk in the year 1604; he died in London in 1641, and was buried in the south transept of Westminster Abbey.

CONGLETON, an incorporated market-town, chapelry, and the head of a union, in the parish of ASTBURY, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 31 miles (E. by S.) from Chester, and 161 (N. W. by W.) from London; containing 922 inhabitants. Some writers have considered this the site of Condote, an aboriginal settlement of the Cornavii; but Whitaker, in his History of Manchester, has convincingly refuted this opinion, and fixed that station at Kinderton. The place is noticed in the Domesday survey, under the designation of Cogleton, but its origin has not been satisfactorily ascertained. In the beginning of the fourteenth century, a free charter was bestowed upon it by Henry de Lacy, Earl of Lincoln, who, in 1282, procured for it the grant of a weekly market. In the reign of Henry VI., an inundation having done considerable damage to the town, the inhabitants obtained permission to divert the course of the river, and subsequently had a grant of the king's mills, which stood on its banks. The town is situated in a valley embosomed in richly-wooded hills, on the south bank of the river Daven, or Dane, over which a handsome bridge was built, in 1782, and, notwithstanding some recent improvements, consists of narrow and irregularly formed streets; the houses in the eastern part are old, and chiefly of timber and brick-work; those in the western part are in general modern and of handsome appearance. The inhabitants are supplied with water from springs, and from the rivulet Howtey, which intersects the town; and, in 1833, an act was obtained for lighting the streets with gas. The environs abound with scenery beautifully diversified by the windings of the river, on the banks of which are numerous elegant mansions and villas. Assemblies are held periodically in the market-house, and races take place in August. The manufacture of gloves, and leather laces called Congleton points, for which the town was celebrated, has given place to the throwing of silk, the spinning of waste silk, and the spinning of cotton. Not less than fifty silk-throwing mills have been erected since 1752, when that branch of manufacture was introduced by Mr. Pattison, of London, who built the first mill, an edifice comprising five stories of rooms, each 240 feet in length, and 24 feet in width, and which is considered in point of extent the second in the kingdom. Ribbons are made to a great extent by the power-loom, and handkerchiefs also are woven to a limited degree. A canal from Marple, to join the Grand Trunk canal at Lawton, has been constructed, which, passing within a quarter of a mile of the town, materially facilitates its trade. The market is on Saturday; the fairs, chiefly for cattle, are on the Thursday before Shrovetide, May 12th, July 12th, and Nov. 22nd. The market-house, a neat and commodious edifice, containing a handsome assembly-room, was built, in 1822, at the expense of Sir Edmund Antrobus, Bart.

The GOVERNMENT, by charter of incorporation granted by James I., in 1625, was vested in a mayor, 8 aldermen, 16 capital burgesses, a high steward, town-clerk, and subordinate officers ; but, by the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., c. 76, the corporation now consists of a mayor, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors ; the borough is divided into three wards, being co-extensive with the township of Congleton ; and the number of magistrates is nine. The corporation formerly held quarterly courts of session for trying prisoners charged with misdemeanors and felonies not capital ; and courts of record are still held for the recovery of debts to any amount, in which, though the corporation do not exercise it, they have the privilege of proceeding according to the statute of Acton-Burnell, otherwise the law of statute-merchant. The court leet is held in August, at which the high steward, or his deputy, presides. The guildhall, a neat brick building, with a piazza in front, supported on four pillars of stone, was rebuilt in 1805. The LIVING is a perpetual curacy ; net income, £143 ; patrons and impropiators, the Mayor and Corporation. The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, was rebuilt of brick in 1740, and a square tower of stone was added in 1786 ; it stands on elevated ground, and commands a fine and extensive prospect. There was formerly another chapel at the end of the bridge, on the opposite side of the river Dane, which, having long since become desecrated, was appropriated to the reception of the poor : it was pulled down in 1810, when a spacious one was erected at Congleton Moss. There are places of worship for Independents, Primitive Methodists, Wesleyans, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. The grammar school is of uncertain foundation, but it existed prior to 1590, and was endowed with a house and garden and an acre and a half of land, to which £17 per annum, including 20s. arising from a bequest, are added by the corporation ; a school-room was erected in 1834. The poor law union of Congleton comprises 31 parishes or places, of which 30 are in the county of Chester, and 1 in that of Stafford ; and contains a population of 29,040. At Buglawton, an adjoining township, is a mineral spring, the water of which is said to be efficacious in scrofula and other diseases. John Bradshaw, chief justice of Chester, and president of the tribunal that passed sentence of death on Charles I., was articulated to an attorney in this town, of which he became mayor, in 1637, and was subsequently appointed high steward. John Whitehurst, a celebrated mechanic, and author of a treatise on the Theory of the Earth, was born here in 1713. The place conferred the title of Baron on the late Sir Henry Parnell, who was created Baron Congleton in 1841, and whose son is the present baron.

CONGRESBURY (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of WINTERSTOKE, E. division of SOMERSET, 12 miles (S. W. by W.) from Bristol ; containing 1380 inhabitants. This place is supposed to have derived its name from St. Congar, son of an eastern monarch, who, in 711, fled from his father's court, to avoid a marriage to which he was disinclined, and ultimately settled here, where he built an oratory, and after receiving a grant of land from Ina, King of the West Saxons, founded an establishment for twelve canons : he afterwards proceeded on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, where he died, and his remains were brought for interment in the monastery that he had founded. The parish, which is situated on the road from Bristol to Weston-Super-Mare, is bounded on the west by extensive marshes, connected with the river Yeo, and stretching to the Bristol Channel, and comprises an area of 4400 acres by measurement. Iron-ore of an excellent kind abounds in the higher parts adjoining Wrington Hill, and is extensively wrought by the Trustees of Queen Elizabeth's Hospital at Bristol, to whom the land belongs. Limestone of good quality is also abundant. The village is a polling-place for the eastern division of the county, and in the centre of it is an ancient lofty cross. A grant was obtained from Henry III., by Jocelyn, Bishop of Bath, for a market and a fair, of which the former has been long discontinued, but the latter is still held on the 14th of September. The living is a vicarage, with that of Wick St. Lawrence annexed, valued in the king's books at £42. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Governors of Queen Elizabeth's Hospital ; appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Wells. The tithes of Congressbury have been commuted for £530, and those of Wick for £250 ; the rectorial tithes have also been commuted for £190 : the rectorial glebe comprises 10 acres, and the vicarial 10. The church is a handsome structure, with a tower and lofty spire, and contains details of various styles. Parochial schools are supported by subscription.

CONHOPE, a township, in the parish of AYMESTREY, hundred of STRETFORD, union of LEOMINSTER, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Pembridge ; containing 72 inhabitants.

CONINGSBY (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and soke of HORNCastle, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (S.) from Horncastle ; containing 1959 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the rivers Bain and Witham, and on the road from Sleaford to Horncastle, comprises by computation 3400 acres ; the surface is flat, and the soil chiefly sand and gravel. An act for more effectually draining lands was obtained in 1840. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £39. 10. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Sir Gilbert Heathcote, Bart. : the tithes were commuted, at the inclosure in 1802, for 600 acres of land, valued at £644 per annum. The church is a handsome structure, in the early English style. There are places of worship for General Baptists, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists ; also a national school, and a Sunday school, endowed with £100, left by the Rev. Mr. Boawer. The poet Dyer, who was for six years resident in this parish, of which he was rector, was buried in the churchyard.

CONINGTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of St. IVES, hundred of PAPWORTH, county of CAMBRIDGE, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from St. Ives ; containing 196 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 15. 10. ; net income, £238 ; patron, Bishop of Ely. The tithes were commuted for land in 1799. There is an endowed school. Traces of the moat surrounding the site of an ancient fortress, called Bruce Castle, may be discerned.

CONINGTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, union and county of HUNTINGDON, 3 miles (S. E. by S.) from Stilton ; containing 224 inhabitants. The lordship, together with the ancient castle, of which there are some vestiges in the village, was given by Canute to Turkill, a Danish lord, who, taking advantage of his residence among the East Angles, invited over Sueno to plunder the country. After Turkill's departure it fell to Waldeof, Earl of Huntingdon, who married Judith, niece to the Conqueror, from whom it descended to the royal line of Scotland, and thence to the Cottons, ancestors of Sir Robert Cotton, celebrated for his valuable collection of books and MSS., known by the name of the Cottonian Library. The parish is situated near the north road, between Alconbury Hill and Stilton, and comprises 3089 acres, which consist partly of highland and partly of fen, the former a clayey soil, and the lower parts extremely fertile, with some excellent meadow and pasture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 6. 8., and in the gift of J. Heathcote, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £450, and the glebe contains 27 acres, to which there is a glebe-house, lately built. The church is a large handsome structure, erected in the reign of Henry VII., and has an embattled tower with octagonal pinnacles; the windows are adorned with stained glass; the interior has lately undergone extensive repairs, and contains many monuments to the Cottons, and an inscribed tablet to the memory of Prince Henry of Scotland, Lord of Conington, &c. The Rev. James Oram, in 1769, left £1000 for the endowment of two schools, one being at this place. Sir Robert Cotton, Bart., on making an excavation for a pond, found the skeleton of a sea fish, twenty feet long, lying in perfect silt, about six feet below the surface of the ground, and as much above the present level of the fens.

CONISBROUGH (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, S. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Rotherham; containing 1445 inhabitants. This place, which is situated on the road from Sheffield to Doncaster, is of high antiquity, and has been connected with all the different dynasties by which Britain has been governed: it is stated to have been the seat of a civil jurisdiction, comprising twenty-eight towns, and is famed for the ruin of its ancient and celebrated Saxon castle, which stands upon a conical hill rising abruptly from the Don, and consists of the body of a strong circular tower encompassed by the ordinary concomitants of strong fortifications. It is first mentioned as a fortress belonging to Hengist, the Saxon leader, who was defeated here, in 487, by Aurelius Ambrosius, and again in 489, at which period, according to Geoffry of Monmouth, he was made prisoner and subsequently beheaded at the northern gate of the citadel, where a tumulus is said to cover his relics: some, however, suppose that the present pile was erected by Earl Warren, to whom William the Conqueror gave the manor. In this castle, Richard, Earl of Cambridge, second son of the Duke of York, and grandson of Edward III., was born, who was beheaded for conspiring against Henry V. The round tower, or keep, is almost perfect, the remaining part forming a picturesque ruin: one of the principal scenes in Sir Walter Scott's romance of Ivanhoe is laid here. The parish comprises about 4000 acres of fertile land, situated in the vale of the Don, and abounds with beautiful scenery: limestone of good quality is quarried to some extent, and the inhabitants are partly employed in the manufacture of linen checks. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 12. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$.; patron, Archbishop of York; impropiators, Sackville Lane Fox, Esq., and others. The great tithes have been commuted for £366. 16., and the vicarial for £223. 6., and a rent-charge of £1. 11. is paid to the archbishop; the glebe contains $66\frac{1}{2}$ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is of Norman character, combined with the early, decorated, and later styles of English architecture, and had formerly a chantry, founded in the fifteenth of Edward II.: there are several monuments, and the mutilated statue of a knight, together with a curious stone, adorned with many hieroglyphics. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a school, erected by subscription, in 1812, the income of which, amounting to £7. 10., arises from the rent of the old school premises, and an endowment of £2 a year.

CONISCLIFFE (ST. EDWIN), a parish, in the union of DARLINGTON, S. E. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM; containing 422 inhabitants, of whom 244 are in the township of High Coniscliffe, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Darlington on the road to Barnard-Castle. Limestone is burnt into lime at Carlbury, where there are extensive kilns. The village of High Coniscliffe, in which stands the church, is situated on the north bank of the Tees, occupying an eminence nearly surrounded by quarries. Carlbury, a township in the parish, was the scene of a sharp struggle between the royal and parliamentary forces. The living is a vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £7. 18. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £216; patron, Bishop of Durham; impropiator of the remainder of the rectorial tithes, P. H. Howard, Esq. The church is a very ancient structure, partly in the Norman and partly in the early English style, with a Norman tower surmounted by a handsome spire. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is partly supported by subscription. Bones and cannon-balls are frequently found at Carlbury.

CONISCLIFFE, LOW, a township, in the parish of CONISCLIFFE, union of DARLINGTON, S. E. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 3 miles (W.) from Darlington; containing 134 inhabitants. This place is on the north bank of the Tees, and on the road from Darlington to Carlbury. Thornton Hall, within the township, now a farm-house, was anciently the seat of the Tailbois, the Thorntons, the Bowes, and Honeywood families.

CONISHOLM (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Louth; containing 146 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 13. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Earl of Ripon: the tithes have been commuted for £180. 2. 6., and the glebe contains 64 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CONISTON, a township, in the parish of SWINE, union of SKIRLAUGH, Middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Hull; containing 110 inhabitants. The abbey of Thornton had possessions at this place, styled in Domesday book Coiningsesbi, in the 12th century; the monastery of Swine held land here at a later period; and among other proprietors in former times occurs the family of Cobbe. The township consists of about 600 acres; the village is pleasantly situated on the road leading from Hull to Hornsea. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1789.

CONISTON, with KILNSAY, a chapelry, in the parish of BURNSALL, union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 12 miles (N. by E.) from Skipton; containing 172 inhabitants. The chapelry comprises by computation 5380 acres, a great portion of which is open moorland, affording tolerable pasture. Kilnsay Craggs, a lofty range of limestone rocks rising to the height of 170 feet, presenting a rugged front of more than half a mile in length, and in places overhanging the line of their base nearly forty feet, form a strikingly grand and romantic feature in the scenery of Wharfedale. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small neat edifice, in which the incumbent of Burnsall officiates. At the inclosure, 15a. 2r. 3p. of land were given to the poor in lieu of right of pasture, but it produces only £5 per annum.

CONISTON, COLD, a township, in the parish of GARGRAVE, union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 7 miles (W. N. W.) from Skipton; containing 242 inhabitants. This place was distinguished during the Border warfare for the intrepid conduct of its inhabitants, who, in an attempt to resist the progress of an army of Scottish invaders at a spot called Sweet Gap, on the northern side of Coniston Moor, were nearly all killed in the conflict which ensued. The township comprises by computation 1710 acres, chiefly moorland, affording excellent pasture; the village is situated on the road to Settle, and the surrounding scenery is pleasingly diversified.

CONISTON, MONK, with SKELWITH, a township, in the parish of HAWKSHEAD, union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Hawkshead; containing 470 inhabitants, of whom 259 are in Monk-Coniston. This place consists of various groups of houses and neat cottages, roofed with slate from the adjacent mountains, and beautifully scattered round the head of Coniston Lake, anciently called Thurston Water, which is about six miles in length from north to south, about half a mile in its greatest width, and about twenty-seven fathoms in depth. The lake abounds with char, said to be of finer flavour than the char of other lakes, and at the head, on the margin of the water, is an inn for the accommodation of visitors, where post-horses, carriages, and pleasure-boats are always in readiness. The scenery around abounds with every variety of picturesque and romantic grandeur. There is a school in which twenty-four girls are instructed at the expense of Mrs. Smith.

CONISTONE, CHURCH, a chapelry, in the parish and union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 6 miles (S. W.) from Ambleside; containing 1148 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £100; patron, T. R. G. Bradyll, Esq. The chapel was rebuilt in 1819, by which means 230 additional sittings were provided.

CONOCK, a tything, in the parish of CHURTON, union of DEVIZES, hundred of SWANBOROUGH, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS, 4½ miles (N. E. by E.) from East Lavington; containing 160 inhabitants.

CONONLEY, a township, in the parish of KILDWICK, union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (S.) from Skipton; containing 1159 inhabitants. The township formerly constituted a joint township with that of Farnhill, from which it was separated in 1838; it comprises by computation 1500 acres. The village is pleasantly situated on the western acclivity of Aire-dale, and the surrounding scenery is pleasingly diversified. A lead-mine was opened in 1840, and is very productive. Tithe rent-charges have been awarded amounting to £62. 3., of which £33. 14. 6. are payable to the Dean and Chapter of Christ-Church, Oxford, and £28. 8. 6. to the vicar of the parish.

CONSIDER, or CONSETT, with KNITSLEY, a township, in the chapelry of MEDOMSLEY, parish and union of LANCHESTER, W. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 14½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Durham; containing 195 inhabitants. This place, anciently Conkesheved, was successively in the possession of various families, and once belonged to the Halls, of whom several had a taste for literary pursuits, especially John Hall, born in 1627, who was a man of very considerable talent, and is commemorated by Antony à Wood. The township comprises 2353 acres, of which 1561 are arable, 520 pasture, and 272 woodland. Extensive iron-works are carried on at Consett, being a recent revival of the ancient manufacture of which this neighbourhood was the seat, the Romans, and, about two centuries ago, a colony of Germans, who had settled at Shotley-Bridge having worked the mines, the produce of which, known as the Derwent iron, is very superior. Coal is also abundant, and, being the out-crop of the Durham coal-field, is probably worked at less expense than in any other part of the kingdom, being produced at 1s. 4d. per ton, exclusively of rent. Fire-bricks are also manufactured; and besides the coal and iron, a considerable traffic exists in lead, lime, and timber. The Stanhope railway, in connexion with the Pontop and Shields railway, intersects the township.

CONSTANTINE (St. CONSTANTINE), a parish, in the union of FALMOUTH, E. division of the hundred of KERRIER, W. division of CORNWALL, 5½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Helston; containing 2042 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the south by the navigable river Hel, and includes a part of the port of Gweek, comprises 8000 acres by computation; the soil near the river is rich and fertile, but in the higher parts sterile rock; the hills are chiefly of granite. The village is pleasantly situated on an eminence nearly surrounded by tin-works, and commands some delightful views of the river, with its numerous creeks, the banks of which are finely clothed with wood. A copper and tin mine, called Wheal Vyvyan, is worked; and large masses of granite are scattered over the surface of the lands, of size sufficient for building bridges. Great quantities of oysters are sent from Merthen, on the river, to Rochester. The petty-sessions for the division are held here. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £19. 3. 10½, and in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, who are also appropriators: the tithes have been commuted for £965. 12., of which £480 are payable to the appropriators, and £485. 12. to the incumbent, who has a glebe of 11 acres. The church contains an ancient monument, with a brass, to the family of Gervis. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Bryanites; and schools are supported by subscription. On the estate of Mayere, in the parish, is a vast rock of granite, computed to weigh 750 tons, called the Tolmen, in the shape of an egg, with several excavations on the top, curiously poised upon two others; and at a short distance is another mass, of circular form, resembling a cap. The sites of decayed chapels are discernible at Bonallock and Budockvean; and near the church, where formerly stood a cross, a bag, full of silver coins of Arthur and Canute, was found, about the close of the seventeenth century.

COOKBURY (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of HOLSWORTHY, hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, Holsworthy and N. divisions of DEVON, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Holsworthy; containing 301 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Milton-Damerell.

COOKHAM (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, and the head of a union, and formerly a market-town, in the hundred of COOKHAM, county of BERKS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Maidenhead; containing 3676 inhabitants. This parish, which includes the northern portion of the town of Maidenhead, extending from the bridge to Maidenhead Thicket, and comprehending the whole of that waste, is situated on the river Thames, by which it is bounded on the north and east, and comprises by measurement about 10,000 acres, of which nearly 4000 are arable, more than 1000 grass, 93 orchards, 151 wood, and 884 common. There is a considerable hamlet in the parish, called Cookham Dean, about a mile and a half to the west of the village, bordering upon Bisham, and consisting of scattered cottages; it is noted for its orchards, rural scenery, and woodland, and the wildness of its character, in the midst of a highly cultivated neighbourhood, renders it the more attractive to the lover of nature in her simpler form. A bridge has been built across the Thames, which greatly facilitates traffic, and affords ready access out of Buckinghamshire to the Great Western railway. The manufacture of coarse paper is carried on; and fairs are held on May 16th and October 11th. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14. 14. 2.; net income, £360; patron, John Rogers, Esq.; impropiators, the Landowners. Near the entrance into the chancel of the church is a brass plate to the memory of Sir Edward Stockton, vicar of the parish, who died in 1534, and is styled "Pylgrym of Jerusalem, and canon professed of the House of our Lady at Guisbro' in Yorkshire:" this no longer appears, being probably concealed by a pew. Several descendants of General Washington, and Mr. Hooke, the historian of the Roman empire, are interred in the church. There is an episcopal chapel in that part of Maidenhead situated in the parish; also places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. A national school is supported by subscription; and two other schools are chiefly maintained by the clergyman. An almshouse, belonging to the Salters' Company, of London, was founded by Mr. James Smith, citizen and salter, for eight aged men and their wives. The poor law union of Cookham comprises 7 parishes or places, and contains a population of 11,060.

COOKLEY (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Halesworth; containing 324 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 1664 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, united to that of Huntingfield, and valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4. The church is chiefly in the later English style, and consists of a nave and chancel, with an embattled tower; the font is curiously sculptured, and there is a Norman doorway on the north side filled up. A school was founded by Thomas Neale, in 1701.

COOLING (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of HOO, hundred of SHAMWELL, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 6 miles (N. by E.) from Rochester; containing 144 inhabitants. This parish, originally called Colniges, or Colneges, from its bleak situation, and at a later period Cowling, contains the remains of a castle built in 1331, formerly of great strength, but long since dismantled; they occupy eight acres. The parish, which is bounded on the north by that part of the Thames, named Sea-reach, comprises about 1500 acres of land, whereof the substratum is chalk. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14, and in the gift of J. Alliston, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £570, and the glebe contains about 9 acres. In the church is an ancient tomb of Lord Cobham.

COOLING (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union and hundred of RISBRIDGE, W. division of SUFFOLK, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Clare; containing 882 inhabitants. There are fairs on July 31st and October 17th. Branches Hall, in the parish, is a large and handsome mansion. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £100; patrons and impropiators, Master and Fellows of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. Wm. Deynes, in the 35th of Elizabeth, bequeathed estates in the parish, the proceeds to be equally divided between the parishes of Cooling, Hargrave, Barrow, and Moulton.

COOL-PILATE, a township, in the parish of ACTON, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 4 miles (S.) from Nantwich; containing 59 inhabitants. The impropiate tithes have been commuted for £45, and the vicarial for £12. 18. 8.

COOMBE, a township, in the parish of PRESTEIGN, union of KNIGHTON, hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Presteign; containing 121 inhabitants. It consists of 608 acres, and is intersected by the river Lug, which partly separates it on the north-west from Wales, and is joined here by the brook Endwell. Many vestiges of British encampments are to be seen in the vicinity.

COOMBE, a hamlet, in the parish of HUISE-EPISCOPI, union of LANGPORT, E. division of the hundred of KINGSBURY, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 25 inhabitants.

COOMBE, a tything, in the parish of EAST MEON, union of PETERSFIELD, hundred of EAST MEON, Petersfield and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 44 inhabitants.

COOMBE, BISSETT (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of ALDERBURY, hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 3 miles (S. W.) from Salisbury; containing 406 inhabitants. The place derives its name from its situation in one of the narrow bourns, or combes, with which Salisbury Plain is intersected, and its distinguishing adjunct from the family to which it formerly belonged: it is on the road from Salisbury to Blandford and Exeter, and comprises about 2200 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Harnham annexed, valued in the king's books at £7; patron, Prebendary of Coombe and Harnham in the Cathedral of Salisbury; impropiator, Earl of Radnor. The great tithes have been commuted for £370, and the impropiator's glebe contains 130 acres; the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £210, of which £50 are for Harnham, and there is a glebe-house. The church is in the later English style.

COOMBE-KEYNES (HOLY ROOD), a parish, in the union of WAREHAM and PURBECK, hundred of WINFRITH, Wareham division of DORSET, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Wareham; containing 135 inhabitants. The village, from numerous old foundations and traces of the sites of gardens, appears to have been originally of greater extent, and is supposed to have dwindled into its present state of a few inconsiderable cottages, from the want of a supply of water. Sandstone of very inferior quality is dug on the heath land for fences. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Wool annexed, valued in the king's books at £13. 18. 11½., and in the gift of J. Weld, Esq., the impropiator: the great tithes have been commuted for £201. 15., and the vicarial for £110. The church is partly in the early English style, and partly of later date.

COOMBS, a parish, in the union and hundred of STEYNING, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX, 2 miles (S. E. by S.) from Steyning; containing 80 inhabitants. It is bounded on the east by the navigable river Adur, and comprises about 1400 acres of arable and pasture land in nearly equal portions. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 0. 2½., and in the gift of Colonel Wyndham: the tithes have been commuted for £192, and the glebe contains 16¾ acres. The church is in the early English style. A parochial school is supported by the officiating clergyman. On the Downs are traces of ancient tumuli.

COOMBS-EDGE, a township, in the parish and union of CHAPEL-EN-LE-FRITH, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 2¼ miles (N. W. by W.) from Buxton; containing 328 inhabitants.

COPDOCK (ST. PETER), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of SAMFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Ipswich; containing 299 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Washbrook annexed, valued in the king's books at £9. 12. 8½., and in the gift of Lord Walsingham: the tithes have been commuted for £300, and the glebe comprises 28 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. There is a school, in union with the National Society. Copdock Hall was the property of Lord Chief Justice de Grey.

COPFORD, a parish, in the union of LEXDEN and WINSTREE, Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, N. division of ESSEX, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Colchester; containing 645 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from London to Colchester, and comprises a very irregular area, about thirteen miles in circumference; the lands are generally low, in some parts undulated, and the soil is gravelly, though producing fair average crops; the general scenery is pleasing, and enlivened with several fine sheets of water. The manor was the property of the Bishops of London from a remote period till the time of the Conquest. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £660, and the glebe comprises 74 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church, an ancient structure, is principally of Norman architecture; the walls are of unusual thickness, and the chancel is circular at the eastern end. Bonner, Bishop of London, who was lord of the manor, resided for a considerable time at Copford Hall.

COPGROVE (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 4¾ miles (S. W. by W.) from Boroughbridge; containing 103 inhabitants. It comprises 1000 acres, the surface of which is hilly, and the soil gravelly: a small stream, a tributary to the Ure, passes on the west, and separates the place from the parish of Burton-Leonard. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 9. 7., and in the gift of T. Duncombe, Esq., of Copgrove Hall: the tithes have been commuted for £170, and the glebe contains 23 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. St. Mongah's Well, in the village, was formerly celebrated for its medicinal properties.

COPE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BEDFORD, hundred of WIXAMTREE, county of BEDFORD, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Bedford; containing 551 inhabitants. This parish, which is intersected by the road from Oxford to Cambridge, is bounded on the north by the navigable river Ouse, and comprises by computation, 2108 acres, whereof 1350 are arable, 580 pasture, and 50 wood. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7; net income, £215; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford: the glebe consists of 7 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is in the later English style, and contains some ancient brasses. There is an old house, formerly belonging to the family of Luke, one of whom, Sir S. Luke, employed Butler, the poet, as secretary, and was ridiculed under the character of Hudibras.

COPLESTONE, a hamlet, in the parish of COLEBROKE, union and hundred of CREDITON, Crediton and N. divisions of DEVON, 4¼ miles (W. N. W.) from Crediton. The village formerly contained a chapel, and according to some authorities, a mint and prison, long since destroyed: there are still some remains of an ancient cross.

COPMANTHORPE, a chapelry, in the parish of ST. MARY-BISHOPSHILL-JUNIOR, union of YORK, E. division of AINSTY wapentake, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from York; containing 284 inhabitants. The chapelry, called in old documents Temple Copmanthorpe, comprises by measurement 1652 acres, of which 1337 are arable, 236 meadow and pasture, 30 woodland, and 47 common. The York and North-Midland railway passes through the township, and there is a small station near the hamlet. The tithes have been commuted for £498. 15., of which £430 are payable to the Dean and Chapter of York, and £68. 15. to the vicar of the parish, the former having also a glebe of 25 acres, and the latter a glebe of one acre. The chapel is a small plain building: a faculty was granted, in 1750, for inclosing a chapelyard for the interment of the dead. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is endowed with £4 per annum. Adjoining the hamlet is a field, called "Temple field," in which, according to tradition, anciently stood a temple, but of what description, or to whom dedicated, there is no record; but stones, evidently once parts of pillars, and others curiously carved, have been found in the field, and in the fields adjoining, and similar ones appear also in the walls of some of the oldest houses.

COPP, a chapelry, in the parish of ST. MICHAEL-UPON-WYRE, union of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £65; patron, Rev. H. Hornby. A school is endowed with land and money producing £34. 10. 6.

COPPENHALL (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER; comprising 2615 acres, and containing 747 inhabitants, of whom 544 are in the township of Church-Coppenhall, 5 miles (N. E.) from Nantwich, and 203 in that of Monks-Coppenhall. The Grand Junction railway extends for nearly 2½ miles in the parish; and the company have purchased land, at Coppenhall Hey, adjoining the station of the Chester and Crewe railway, for the erection of a foundry and other buildings, and nearly 300 houses for the residence of the clerks, workmen, and others employed on the line. The Chester and Crewe railway runs for a mile and a half, and the Crewe and Manchester for nearly two miles through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield: the tithes have been commuted for £275, and the glebe comprises 10 acres. The church, built of wood and plaster, in the style which prevailed in the reign of Elizabeth, was taken down, and rebuilt of brick, in 1821. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

COPPENHALL, a chapelry, in the parish and union of PENKRIDGE, E. division of the hundred of CUTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Stafford; containing 119 inhabitants. It comprises 963a. 2r. 5p., about three-fourths of which are arable, and the rest pasture and meadow. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £85; patron and impropiator, Lord Hatherton. The chapel, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is built of timber and brickwork, of the reign of Elizabeth.

COPPINGFORD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, union and county of HUNTINGDON, 7 miles (N. W. by N.) from Huntingdon; containing 45 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 807 acres, of which 537 are arable, 200 pasture, and 70 wood. The living is a rectory, consolidated with that of Upton, and valued in the king's books at £18. 13. 1½.: the church is in ruins.

COPPIN-SIKE, an extra-parochial liberty, with FERRY-CORNER, in the union of BOSTON, wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN; containing 42 inhabitants.

COPPULL, a chapelry, in the parish of STANDISH, union of CHORLEY, hundred of LEYLAND, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Chorley; containing 1031 inhabitants. One of the intermediate stations of the North Union railway is situated at this place. The living, which is a district incumbency, is a perpetual curacy; net income, £120; patron, Rector of Standish. The tithes have been commuted for £261. 12. 6.

COPSTON MAGNA, a chapelry, in the parish of MONKS-KIRBY, union of LUTTERWORTH, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 6¼ miles (E. S. E.) from Nuneaton; containing 113 inhabitants, and comprising 1080 acres. The chapel is in ruins.

CORBETSTYE, a hamlet, in the parish of UPMINSTER, union of ROMFORD, hundred of CHAFFORD, S. division of ESSEX; containing 177 inhabitants.

CORBRIDGE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; comprising the townships of Aydon, Aydon-Castle, Clarewood, Corbridge, Dilston, Halton, Halton-Shields, Thornborough, and Great and Little Whittington; and containing 2103 inhabitants, of whom 1356 are in the township of Corbridge, 4½ miles (E.) from Hexham. This place, which is of great antiquity, appears to have been known to the Romans, who, at a short distance to the west, had a station on the line of the Watling-street, which is supposed by Camden to have been the Curia Ottadinarum of Ptolemy, and by Horsley the Corstopitum of Antoninus, now called Corchester. In 1138, David, King of Scotland, who made frequent incursions into the English territories, encamped his forces at this place, which was subsequently burnt by the Scots in 1296, and again in 1311. From its great importance, King John, expecting to find concealed treasure, directed a search to be made here, but without effect. This monarch, in the 6th year of his reign, bestowed the manor upon Robert de Clavering, Baron of Warkworth; and the last baron having granted his Northumberland estates to the crown, in reversion, they were given by Edward III. to Henry Percy, in whose line they continue to this day. During the parliamentary war, a battle was fought here between the royalists and the Scottish forces. The place was formerly a borough and market-town, had extensive privileges, and returned members to parliament; and of its ancient consequence some vestiges are still apparent: to the south of the church is a venerable tower, once used as the town gaol; and a little to the east of it is an eminence called Gallow Hill, the place of execution for criminals. It early carried on a considerable trade, and that it was originally of much greater extent, is evident, from the former existence of three additional churches, severally dedicated to St. Mary, St. Helen, and the Holy Trinity, of which the sites are well known. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Tyne, and measures nine miles and a half in length from south-east to north-west, and about six miles in average breadth; the soil near the river is a rich and deep mould, and in other parts poor and shallow, but producing favourable crops. Coal, limestone, and lead-ore are found, and also excellent fire-clay, used in the manufacture of fire-bricks and earthenware articles. The lands are intersected by the streams Dilston and Cor, which flow through the parish into the Tyne; and the Newcastle and Carlisle railroad passes by the place. The village is pleasantly situated to the north of the Tyne, over which is a bridge of seven arches, erected in 1674: near the centre of the former market-place is a cross, built in 1814, by the Duke of Northumberland. A fair held on the eve, day, and morrow of St. John the Baptist, has been discontinued; but there are fairs, among the largest in the kingdom, at Stagshaw Bank, within the parish, on Whitsun-eve and July 4th, for live stock, at the latter of which much linen and woollen cloth, brought from Scotland, is exposed for sale; and a tryst fair, established in 1820, is held on Nov. 24th.

The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 11. 8.; net income, £482; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The church is a neat edifice, supposed to have been built with materials brought from the ruins of the Roman station in the neighbourhood. At Halton, in the parish, is a chapel of ease, in the burial-ground of which is a Roman altar; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a school, established in 1824, in connexion with the National Society. Ann Radcliffe, in 1699, bequeathed £10 per annum for apprenticing children; and Dame Elizabeth Radcliffe, in 1688, gave a rent-charge of £10, and the Rev. Robert Troutbeck, in 1706, lands producing £30 per annum, to the poor. Numerous coins and other relics of antiquity have been turned up on the site of the Roman station; and in 1735, a large piece of Roman plate, weighing 148 ounces, was found in an inclosure near the Tyne, which was claimed by the Duke of Somerset, as lord of the manor. Two altars, with Greek inscriptions, were also discovered, of which one, dedicated to Astarbe, the celebrated goddess of the Eastern nations, is esteemed one of the greatest curiosities in Great Britain; and, about a century and a half since, some bones and teeth of an extraordinary size were accidentally exposed by the overflowing of the Cor, supposed to be the remains of oxen sacrificed at an altar.

CORBY (St. JOHN THE EVANGELIST), a market-town and parish, in the union of BOURNE, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 33 miles (S. by E.) from Lincoln, and 103 (N. by W.) from London; containing 714 inhabitants. The parish is on the road from Bourne to Colsterworth, and comprises by computation 2724 acres, of which more than 1000 are old inclosure, 305 wood, 270 pasture, and the rest arable: the town is pleasantly situated in a valley, resting on a rocky base, and the lands are richly diversified with hill and dale, interspersed with a good supply of ash and oak; the soil is in some parts clayey and in others stony. The market, which has nearly fallen into disuse, is on Wednesday; the fairs are on August 6th and the Monday before October 10th, for cattle and horses. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to the rectory of Irnham, and valued in the king's books at £5. 12. 1½.: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £100, and the vicarial for £126; the glebe contains 91 acres. The church is an ancient structure, in the early English style. The grammar school was founded, in 1669, by Charles Reed, Esq., who endowed it with a rent-charge of £48. 15.

CORBY (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of KETERING, hundred of CORBY, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 2½ miles (S. E.) from Rockingham; containing 791 inhabitants. It is intersected by the road from Oundle to Harborough, and comprises 2613*a.* 3*r.* 30*p.*: there is a quarry of good building-stone, used also for the roads. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 16. 3., and in the gift of the Earl of Cardigan: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1829. The church is an ancient structure; the tower and chancel are of the later English style, and the nave of much earlier date. There is a place of worship for Independents. Mr. William Rowlatt, in 1835, gave £3000 for the endowment of a grammar school, part of which is appropriated to the support of a British and Foreign school for boys and girls. Lord Latimer was buried here.

CORBY, GREAT, a township, in the parish of WETHERAL, union of CARLISLE, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 6¼ miles (E. S. E.) from Carlisle; containing 806 inhabitants. The village is pleasantly situated on the east bank of the Eden; and contiguous to it, on the summit of a precipitous cliff, stands Corby Castle, anciently the seat of the Salkelds, who inherited it from Hubert de Vallibus, Baron of Gilsland, and from whom it passed by purchase to its present possessors, the Howards, a branch of the Norfolk family. The mansion was much modernised and improved in 1813, and the scenery and walks surrounding it abound in natural beauties. The Corby viaduct for conveying the Newcastle and Carlisle railway over Corby, or Drybeck, valley, consists of seven arches spanning 40 feet each; the height from the ground is 70 feet, and the whole length 480 feet, and as a specimen of architecture it is little inferior to Wetheral bridge. A school was endowed, in 1720, with 25 acres of land, yielding about £20 per annum.

CORBY, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of WARWICK, union of BAMPION, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 5½ miles (E. by N.) from Carlisle; containing 283 inhabitants. The village is situated at the junction of the Eden and Irthing rivers.

CORELY (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of CLEOBURY-MORTIMER, hundred of STOTTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Cleobury-Mortimer; containing 525 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 5. 10.; net income, £227; patron, R. B. Moore, Esq. There is a national school.

CORFE, a parish, in the union of TAUNTON, hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (S.) from Taunton; containing 279 inhabitants. Stone is quarried, to be burnt into lime. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £66, and is in the gift of Lady Cooper, who owns the tithes, which have been commuted for £89. 13. A parochial school is supported.

CORFE-CASTLE (St. EDWARD THE MARTYR), an incorporated town and parish, in the union of WAREHAM and PURBECK, possessing separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of CORFE-CASTLE, Wareham division of DORSET, 23 miles (E. S. E.) from Dorchester, and 120 (S. W.) from London; containing 1946 inhabitants. This place, which in the Saxon Chronicle is termed Corve and Corvesgate, appears to have derived its importance from a formidable castle erected by Edgar, prior to the year 980, at the gate of which Edward the Martyr, when calling to visit his step-mother Elfrida, was, by her order, treacherously murdered. In the reign of Stephen the castle was taken by Baldwin de Rivers, Earl of Devonshire, who held it against the king; it was frequently the residence of King John, who here kept the regalia, and by whose orders twenty-two prisoners, some of whom were among the principal nobility of Poitiers, were starved to death in its dungeons; and Edward II., after his deposition in 1327, was removed from Kenilworth to this fortress, where he was detained for a short time prior to his tragical death at Berkeley Castle. During the parliamentary war, Lord Chief Justice Bankes, who then resided in the castle, being with the king at York, Sir Walter Earl and Sir Thomas Trenchard assaulted the place, thinking to obtain easy possession of it for the parliament; but it was heroically defended by Lady Bankes and her daughters, with the assistance only of their domestics, until, on the approach of Charles to Blandford, Captain Lawrence was sent to her assistance, when, having raised a small guard of her tenantry, she sustained a siege for six weeks, and, with the loss of two men only preserved the castle for the king. In 1645, the castle was again besieged by the parliamentary forces, under Fairfax, when, by the treachery of Lieutenant-Colonel Pitman, an officer of the garrison, who deserted from the king's service, it was taken and demolished. The remains of this stupendous edifice are extensive and interesting, and plainly indicate its former prodigious strength; they occupy the summit of a lofty and steep eminence to the north of the town, with which they are connected by a bridge of four narrow circular arches, crossing a deep ravine, and leading to the principal entrance between two massive circular towers. The walls, which inclose a spacious area divided into four wards, were defended by numerous circular towers at convenient distances, of which several have declined from the perpendicular line, by the attempts made to undermine them at the siege, and of which, together with the walls, vast fragments have fallen into the vale: at the western angle are the remains of the keep, a massive octagonal tower, and in the inner ward those of the king's and queen's towers, between which is part of the chapel, with two pointed windows; the east end of the king's tower, which is separated from the main building, is overgrown with ivy, and forms a picturesque feature in these extensive ruins, which, from their elevated situation, are conspicuously grand and majestic.

The town stands on an eminence, nearly in the centre of the Isle of Purbeck, and consists principally of two streets diverging from the market-place, in the centre of which is an ancient stone cross; the houses are in general built of stone, obtained from the neighbouring quarries, and approached by a flight of steps; the inhabitants are well supplied with water. The bridge connecting the castle with the town is called St. Edward's bridge, and is said to be the spot where Edward, fainting from the loss of blood, fell from his horse and expired. At the entrance from the London road is an ancient stone bridge over the small river Corfe, by which the town is bounded on the east. The population is chiefly employed in the quarries and clay-pits, for which the isle is celebrated; and from the principal of these, called Norden, about a mile from the town, a railway has been constructed, to facilitate the communication with Poole harbour, where the clay is shipped for the Staffordshire and other potteries. A few of the female inhabitants are engaged in the knitting of stockings. The market, which was held on Thursday, has been for some time discontinued; the fairs are on May 12th and October 29th. The lord of the manor of Corfe was anciently hereditary lord-lieutenant of the Isle of Purbeck, and had the power of appointing all officers, and determining all actions or suits by his bailiff or deputy; he was also admiral of the isle, and exercised the authority of lord high admiral, in which capacity he was entitled to all wrecks, except in cases where there was a special grant to the contrary, and had power to array the militia; but these privileges ceased on the passing of the militia act, in 1757, Mr. Bankes, then lord of the manor, having omitted to enforce his claims. Though a borough by prescription, the town was not incorporated till the 18th of Queen Elizabeth, who invested it with the same powers as were enjoyed by the cinqueports. Under the existing charter of Charles II., the corporation consists of a mayor, who is elected at the court leet of the lord of the manor, held at Michaelmas, and eight barons, who have previously served the office of mayor; the mayor and the late mayor are justices of the peace. The elective franchise was granted in the 14th of Elizabeth, from which time the borough returned two members to parliament, till it was disfranchised by the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45: the right of election was vested in the freeholders and in holders of leases determinable on life or lives, paying scot and lot; and the mayor was returning officer.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £40. 14. 7.; net income, £685; patron, William Bankes, Esq. The church is a spacious and ancient structure, partly Norman, and partly in the early English style, with a lofty square embattled tower, crowned by pinnacles and ornamented with niches, in which are some sculptured decorations of singular design; it contains a few old monuments and several altar-tombs of Purbeck marble. The parish is in the centre of a district of considerable extent, in which the earliest of the Sunday schools were established, under the auspices of William Morton Pitt, Esq., of Kingston House. Several schools are supported by subscription; and there are almshouses in East-street, for six aged persons, with an endowment in land. In making a road near the town, in 1768, two stone coffins, formed of flat stones placed edgewise, and containing a skeleton, were found; and in 1753, an urn containing burnt bones was discovered, with the mouth downwards, near St. Edward's bridge. About two miles to the east of the town is an eminence called Nine-Barrow Down, whereon are sixteen barrows of various dimensions, chiefly circular, nine of which are in a straight line; eight or ten of them are surrounded by a narrow trench. The eminence commands a beautiful view of the bay of Sandwich, the British Channel, and the Isle of Wight.

CORFE-MULLEN, a chapelry, in the parish of STURMINSTER-MARSHALL, union of WIMBORNE and CRANBORNE, hundred of COGDEAN, Wimborne division of DORSET, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Wimborne-Minster; containing 758 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Nicholas, and has been enlarged by the addition of 140 free sittings. There is an annuity of £27 for the support of a school, to which Richard Lockyer, in 1706, bequeathed £17: it is on the national plan.

CORFTON, a chapelry, in the parish of DIDDLEBURY, union of LUDLOW, hundred of MUNSLOW, S. division of SALOP, 8½ miles (N.) from Ludlow; containing 232 inhabitants.

CORHAMPTON, a parish, in the union of DROXFORD, hundred of MEON-STOKE, Droxford and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 15 miles (S. W. by S.) from Alton; containing 181 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the London and Gosport road, and comprises by computation 2500 acres; the scenery is pleasingly varied, and combines several interesting features. Preshaw, the seat of Walter Long, Esq., is a noble mansion of various styles, situated in an extensive park, commanding several fine views of the surrounding country. The living is a perpetual curacy or donative; net income, £39; patron and impropiator, Wadham Wyndham, Esq. The church is an ancient edifice, apparently of early Norman construction, and consists of a nave and chancel. In 1669, William Collins gave a school-house, and £450, producing an income of £22. 10., for which eight boys are instructed on the national plan.

CORLEY, a parish, in the union of MERIDEN, Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Coventry; containing 288 inhabitants. This place, called in the Norman survey Cornelie, is supposed by Dugdale to have derived its name from the British "Coryn," signifying the top of any thing, in reference to its situation on one of the highest elevations in England. The parish comprises 1373 acres, the surface of which is hilly, and the soil, though somewhat sandy, is in general good and productive: it is intersected from south-east to north-west by the road between Coventry and Tamworth. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes; net income, £400; patron, A. F. Gregory, Esq.

CORNARD, GREAT (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of BABERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, 1¼ mile (S. E.) from Sudbury; containing 938 inhabitants. It is bounded on the west by the river Stour, which is here navigable. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9; patrons and impropiators, Heirs of the late J. G. Sparrow, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £420, and the vicarial for £167; the glebe contains nearly 10 acres, with a glebe-house. There is a national school.

CORNARD, LITTLE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of BABERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (S. E.) from Sudbury; containing 396 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south-west by the navigable river Stour, and comprises about 1400 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 2. 8½, and in the patronage of Mrs. Green: the tithes have been commuted for £492, and there is a glebe of 50 acres; the incumbent receives £8 a year out of the tithes of Bures-St. Mary, and the vicar of that place has £3. 5. out of the tithes of Little Cornard parish.

CORNBROUGH, a township, in the parish of SHERIFF-HUTTON, union of MALTON, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK, 11 miles (N. by E.) from York; containing 63 inhabitants. The township comprises 920 acres by measurement, divided between arable and pasture.

CORN-DEAN, a tything, in the parish and union of WINCHCOMB, Lower division of the hundred of KIFTS-GATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER.

CORNELLY (ST. CORNELIUS), a parish, in the union of TRURO, W. division of the hundred of POWDER and of CORNWALL, ¾ of a mile (W. by S.) from Tregoney; containing 119 inhabitants, and comprising about 1047 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £47; patron, the Vicar of Probus; impropiators, the principal Inhabitants: the glebe contains about 8 acres. It was anciently annexed to Probus, from which it was separated in 1532, the incumbent paying 6s. 8d. annually to the vicar of that parish, as an acknowledgment. A small school is supported by Mrs. Gregor.

CORNEY (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BOOTLE, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 4 miles (S. E. by S.) from Ravensglass; containing 273 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the coast of the Irish Sea, is about three miles in length, and two miles in average breadth, and is bounded on the east by a lofty range of fells, stretching on the south to the mountain of Black Comb; the surface is boldly varied, and the scenery in many parts strikingly picturesque; the higher grounds command diversified prospects, and from Corney Hall, the property of Richard Hobson, Esq., M.D., of Leeds, is an exceedingly fine view of the Irish Sea and numerous interesting objects. On the west of the Hall is a richly-cultivated tract of land, about two miles in breadth, reaching to the margin of the sea, beyond which is seen the Isle of Man, and to the north the reef of rocks called St. Bees heads; still further north, in the direction of Solway frith, parts of Scotland are distinctly visible, extending from Kirkcudbright to Wigton bay; and towards the south, appear Walney Island and the mouth of the Duddon, and beyond these, the mouth of Morecambe bay, the interior of which is only hidden by the lower promontory of Black Comb. The lands of Corney Hall are watered by a fine stream, abounding with black trout. The wheat grown here is of good quality, and is either sent to the markets of Broughton, Ulverstone, and Egremont, or shipped at Ravensglass or Duddon. The breed of long-horned cattle was brought to a state of high perfection by the late Mr. Benn and his son, at Middleton Place, in the parish, and year after year obtained the first prizes awarded by the Workington Agricultural Society; but, in 1816, Dr. Hobson introduced the pure short-horned breed, which, from their earlier maturity and greater rapidity of feeding, have become almost exclusively the staple stock of the district. The mountains afford excellent pasture to a small breed of sheep, which, after four or five years of age, are fed in the low grounds for the butcher, and are unrivalled for delicacy of flavour. On the lands of Corney Hall are several veins of iron-ore of very rich quality, but of limited depth, which were wrought to some extent about 80 years since. A manorial court is held at Middleton Place. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 17. 1.; net income, £140; patron, the Earl of Lonsdale. To the north of the village are some extensive ruins, of which the history is unknown, and in the neighbourhood are numerous Druidical remains. Mr. Troughton, an eminent philosophical instrument maker, was a native of the parish.

CORNFORTH, a township, in the parish of BISHOP'S-MIDDLEHAM, union of SEDFIELD, N. E. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 6¼ miles (S. S. E.) from Durham; containing 700 inhabitants. It comprises about 1570 acres: coal is obtained, which is shipped on the Tees, and a vast quantity of limestone is quarried from a hill, at the bottom of which the village lies, in a low and warm situation: the houses are disposed in the form of a square, with a green of several acres in the centre. A halmote court is held once in eighteen months, for the recovery of debts under 40s., at which the bishop's steward presides. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £108. 6. 6., and the vicarial for £28. 10. The late Bishop of Durham gave £50, and the Diocesan Society £20, towards the erection of a national school. Dr. Hutchinson, a learned writer, was born here. An extensive burial-ground was discovered, a few years since, in a field on the summit of the high ground on the south of the village: the graves are made in all directions, and at no great depth in the magnesian limestone; in one was found the umbo of a shield, and in another the head of a spear.

CORNHILL, a parish, in the union of BERWICK-UPON-TWEED, county of DURHAM, but for electoral purposes connected with the N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. by S.) from Coldstream; containing 823 inhabitants. This place comprises about 4430 acres, of which the soil is productive, and chiefly arable, and the scenery of a romantic character. The village, which is pretty and salubrious, is separated from Scotland by the Tweed; Coldstream is the first town over the border, where the river is crossed by a noble stone bridge. There is a good hotel for the sporting gentlemen who resort here to hunt in great numbers during the winter months. A fair is held on December 6th. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham, who are the appropriators. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, was rebuilt in 1751, when a stone coffin, containing fragments of a human skeleton, and two urns of coarse earthenware, were found; it was again partly rebuilt in 1840, at a cost of about £500, and is nearly in the early English style, with a campanile bell-tower, and contains 246 sittings, of which 156 are free. A schoolroom was erected in 1837, for the instruction of the poor, in connexion with the Church. The castle here was demolished by the Scots in 1385, and again in 1549, when a considerable booty fell into their possession; the remains are built up in a modern mansion. To the south-east is an encampment of unusual construction; and a quarter of a mile westward is another large collection of earth-works, the most remarkable north of the Wall for variety and extent. In a wood is St. Helen's well, the water of which is serviceable in scorbutic and gravel complaints, but is not much used.

CORNSAY, a township, in the parish and union of LANCHESTER, N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Wolsingham; containing 201 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £119. 10. In 1811, Wm. Russell, Esq., of Brancepeth Castle, gave an endowment of £20 per annum for a schoolmaster, and built and endowed almshouses for six men and six widows.

CORNWALL, a maritime county, bounded on the north by the Bristol Channel, on the west by the Atlantic Ocean, on the south by the English Channel, and on the east by Devonshire. It extends from $49^{\circ} 57' 30''$ to $50^{\circ} 55' 30''$ (N. lat.) and from $4^{\circ} 10'$ to $5^{\circ} 44'$ (W. lon.), and contains 1327 square miles, or 849,280 statute acres: within its limits are 65,574 inhabited houses, 4962 uninhabited, and 926 in the course of erection; and the population amounts to 341,279, of whom 164,757 are males, and 176,522 females. The part of Britain including this county and a portion of Devonshire, from its shape was called by its ancient British inhabitants Kernou, or, as it is written by the Welsh, Kerniw, signifying "the horn," which word was latinized to Carnubia or Cornubia; and when the Saxons gave the name of Weales to the Britons, they distinguished those who had retired into Kernou, or Cornubia, by that of Cornweales; and their country was thus called Cornuwall, or Cornwall, that is, "Cornish Wales." At the time of the Roman Conquest, the northern part was inhabited by the Cimbri, the eastern by the Danmonii, and the remaining portion by the Carnabii, of whom the Danmonii had subdued the two other tribes, and taken possession of their territories; but on the completion of the Roman Conquest, the whole became included in the great province of Britannia Prima. During the aggressions of the Saxons, various acts of hostility occurred between them and the Cornish Britons, and the latter were obliged to invoke the assistance of the Danes, who arrived on this coast in 806. King Egbert, nevertheless, overran the whole territory in 813; and the Britons were at length finally reduced by Athelstan, prior to which time they had occupied a great part of Devonshire, and inhabited Exeter in common with the Saxons; but they were driven out of that city by Athelstan, after the defeat of Howell, King of Cornwall, near Exeter, and were compelled to retire to the west of the river Tamar.

Cornwall is within the diocese of Exeter, and province of Canterbury, and forms, together with three parishes in Devonshire, an archdeaconry, comprising the deaneries of East, Kerrier, Penwith, Powder, Pyder, Trigg-Major, Trigg-Minor, and West, and containing 203 parishes: the Scilly Islands are also in the archdeaconry of Cornwall. The office of rural dean, which in most parts of the kingdom has become nearly nominal, is here an efficient office; the rural deans are appointed annually, perform regular visitations to every church within their deanery, and report the state of each at the archdeacon's visitations. For Civil purposes the county is divided into the hundreds of East, Kerrier, Lesnewth, Penwith, Powder, Pyder, Stratton, Trigg, and West. It contains the borough and market towns of Bodmin, Falmouth, Helston, Launceston, Liskeard, Penryn, St. Ives, and Truro; the following market towns, also ancient boroughs, but deprived of their privileges of sending representatives to parliament by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, viz., Bossiney, Callington, Camelford, East Looe, Fowey, Lostwithiel, St. Mawes, Saltash, and Tregoney; four decayed boroughs having no markets, deprived in like manner, viz., Newport, St. Germans, St. Michael, and West Looe; and twelve market-towns which are not boroughs, viz., Camborne, Grampound, Marazion, Padstow, Penzance, Polperro, Redruth, St. Agnes, St. Austell, St. Columb, Stratton, and Wadebridge. Of the above towns, twelve are sea-ports, viz., Falmouth, Fowey, Looe, Marazion, Padstow, Penryn, Penzance, Polperro, St. Agnes, St. Ives, Truro, and Wadebridge; besides which there are the smaller ports of Boscastle, Bude, Charlestown, Gweek, Hayle, Helford.

Mevagissey, New Quay, Porth, Port-Isaac, Portleven, Portreath or Basset's Cove, and Trevannance. By the act above named the county was divided into two portions, called the Eastern and the Western divisions, each sending two representatives to parliament: the boroughs, Bodmin and Helston continue to return two members each, as also does Penryn, in conjunction with Falmouth, which, prior to the passing of the act, enjoyed no share in the representation: Helston, Launceston, Liskeard, and St. Ives, each now return only one. Cornwall is included in the Western circuit: the Spring and Summer assizes, and the quarter-sessions, are held at Bodmin, where stand the county gaol and house of correction; and the Easter quarter-sessions at Truro.

Cornwall is a royal duchy, settled by act of parliament on the eldest son of the sovereign; and its immediate government is vested in the duke, who has his chancellor, attorney-general, solicitor-general, and other officers, and his court of exchequer, with the appointment of sheriffs, &c. The important concerns of the tin-mines are under a separate jurisdiction, the tin-miners being, by ancient privilege confirmed by Edward III., exempt from all other civil jurisdiction than that of the Stannary Courts, except in cases affecting land, life, or limb. At the head of this jurisdiction is the lord-warden of the stannaries, under whom is the vice-warden, whose court, held generally once a month, is a court of equity for all matters relating to the tin-mines and trade, from which no writ of error lies to the courts at Westminster, but there is an appeal to the lord-warden, and from him to the duke and his council. Issues are frequently directed by the vice-warden to be tried in the stannary courts, which are held at the end of every three weeks (except in the stannary of Foymore, in which there is scarcely any business for the court), before the steward of each stannary and a jury, for determining on all civil actions arising within the stannaries, which have reference to the tin-mines; but the decision of each of these courts is subject to an appeal to the vice-warden, and from him to the superior authorities. Henry VII., on confirming their ancient privileges, decreed that no new laws affecting the miners should be enacted by the duke and his council, without the consent of twenty-four persons, called stannators, six being chosen out of each of the four stannaries, or mining districts, of Foymore, Blackmore, Tywarnhaile, and Penwith and Kerrier: the stannators for Foymore are chosen by the corporation of Lostwithiel, those for Blackmore by the corporation of Launceston, those for Tywarnhaile by the corporation of Truro, and those for Penwith and Kerrier by the corporation of Helston; they are some of the principal gentlemen of property in the mining districts, and, on assembling, elect a speaker, and their meeting is called a stannary parliament. These parliaments have been convened occasionally by the lord-warden, as the circumstances of the times have required new laws, or the revision of the old; the last met at Truro, in 1752, and continued by adjournments until Sept. 11th, 1753. The stannary prison is at Lostwithiel, where the ancient records of the stannaries were kept previously to the parliamentary war, when they were burnt.

Nearly the whole of the county is remarkable for the inequality of its surface; a large portion consists of uncultivated moors, abounding with tors composed of immense masses of granite, and extending from near Blisland, on the west, to near Northill on the east, and from near Davidstow on the north, to the vicinity of St. Neot's on the south, about twelve miles in length, and ten in breadth. The high grounds, through which the great roads chiefly pass, present a dreary aspect, especially in the mining district, where the surface has in many places been greatly disfigured by the stream-works of successive ages; but in several parts there is a pleasing diversity of hill and dale, and some of the valleys are richly varied and beautifully picturesque. The most agreeable scenery is principally found near the southern coast, and also along the course of the Tamar; and Falmouth bay and Mount's bay are considered equal in beauty to any recesses on the English coast. So salubrious is the Climate, that Cornwall has long been celebrated for the longevity of its inhabitants, and the southern coast, especially towards the Land's End, is, on account of the superior mildness of the air, much resorted to by invalids in the winter season. The prevailing Soils are, the black gravelly, the shelly or slaty, and various loams, differing in colour, texture, and degree of fertility. The labours of the farmer are entirely engaged in tillage, to the exclusion of the dairy, one-third of the cultivated lands being constantly under arable crops. The corn crops usually cultivated are wheat, barley, and oats, including the naked oat, called in Cornwall pillis or pilez, a word signifying "bald." The green and root crops consist principally of turnips, ruta бага, potatoes, in some places the flat-pole or drum-head cabbage, and yellow clover, trefoil, and rye-grass, the last here called eaver. The dry, light, friable, and porous soils of Cornwall, and its moist and mild climate, are particularly favourable to the growth of potatoes, which have here been cultivated to a great extent longer than in any other parts of the kingdom: in the vicinity of Penzance the land produces two crops in the year, and an acre has been known to yield 300 bushels of the early kidney potatoes at the first crop, and 600 bushels of apple potatoes at the second: a large quantity is sent to London, Plymouth, and Portsmouth. The natural meadows are comparatively of small extent, and lie scattered throughout the county: the only pasture lands consist of the wastes, and of the fields of artificial grasses. Many of the valleys are well wooded, particularly in the south-eastern part of the county, and in the vicinity of Lostwithiel and Bodmin; and there are extensive plantations at Tregothnan, Clowance, Tehidy, Port Eliot, Carelew, Treloarwarren, Boconnock, Heligan, &c.: the principal landowners having of late years directed their attention to planting, chiefly in elevated situations, the face of the country, in the course of twenty or thirty years, will present extensive woodland scenery, both useful and ornamental. Nearly a fourth part of the surface, from 150,000 to 200,000 acres, consists of uninclosed moors, downs, and crofts, as the waste lands are here generally called.

Cornwall has been celebrated for the produce of its MINES from a remote period of antiquity. Strabo, Herodotus, and other ancient writers relate that the Phœnicians, and after them the Greeks and the Romans, traded for TIN to Cornwall and the Scilly islands, under the name of the islands Cassiterides, from a very early period; and Diodorus Siculus, who wrote in the reign of Augustus, gives a particular account of the manner in which the tin-ore was dug and prepared by the Bri-tons. At what time the coinage of the tin procured here was established is uncertain, but it was practised so early as the reign of King John. In that of Edward I. it was first ordered, for better securing the payment of the duty to the earl, that all tin should be brought to certain places appointed for that purpose, to be weighed and stamped, or, as it is usually termed coined; and that no tin should be sold until the stamp had been affixed. The term coinage, by which this process has always been designated, appears to have been derived from cutting off a coign, or corner of each block, to ascertain its purity. The average annual quantity raised from these mines in the years 1799, 1800, and 1801, was 16,820 blocks, each weighing about $3\frac{1}{4}$ cwt.: in 1811, the quantity produced was only 14,698 blocks, but in 1824 it had increased to 28,310, and in 1831 it was 25,155, the average of the eight years from 1824 to 1831 inclusive being 26,647 blocks. The mineral rights of tin in the duchy manors were sold, about eighteen years ago, for a term of years. The tin-ore has always been smelted in the county, at first in blast-furnaces, the buildings for which were called "blowing-houses;" but reverberatory furnaces being introduced early in the last century, the ore has since been smelted in them with pit coal from South Wales, the produce being called "common tin." The blowing-houses have been since used only for smelting the diluvial or stream tin, in which charcoal alone is used; and the produce is called "grain tin," being of purer quality, and bearing a higher price than the common kind. The Copper mines were not extensively worked until the close of the 17th century, since which the quantity of ore raised has been gradually increasing: in 1824, 110,000 tons of ore were obtained, producing 8417 tons of copper, of the value of £743,253; in 1826, 128,459 of ore, producing 10,450 of copper, of the value of £755,358; in the year ending June, 1831, 146,502 of ore, producing 12,218 of copper, of the value of £817,740; and in 1837, 140,753 of ore, producing 10,823 of copper, of the value of £908,613. The produce of the Lead mines is inconsiderable, and the only one from which silver is extracted is in the parish of Calstock.

Much use is made of the various kinds of stone found in the county; and the Cornish slate is a considerable article of commerce. Of this, the principal quarries are those on the southern coast, those between Liskeard and the Tamar, those in the parishes of Padstow and Tintagel, and the celebrated quarry of Delabole, or Dennybal, in the parish of St. Teath, the produce of which is held in the highest esteem, and is shipped in large quantities from Port Isaac, about five miles distant, both coastwise and to the continent: the quartz crystals found in this quarry are of great brilliancy. There is a great quantity of stone suitable for building in various parts of the county: it is principally taken from the porphyry dykes, or elvan courses, which traverse both the granite and slate strata; the granite, or moor-stone, which abounds on the surface of the moors, has of late years been exported for the erection of bridges and other public buildings. Steatite, or soap rock, of a fine soft texture, is found imbedded in the serpentine, near the Lizard, and is the most curious of all the earthy substances found in Cornwall; it is of various colours, but the pure white is most esteemed for the porcelain manufacture, for the use of which much of it is exported. An abundance of feldspar clay, resulting from the decomposition of granite, is found in the parishes of Roche, St. Stephen, and St. Denis, and is likewise shipped, chiefly at the neighbouring ports of Charlestown and Pentuan, for the manufacture of china and fine earthenware. A yellow sandy clay, which, from its resisting intense heat, is called fire-clay, found near Lelant, is sent to Wales, for laying the bottoms of copper furnaces. In the parish of St. Keverne is a yellow clay used to make moulds for casting metals; and near Liskeard is found a clay of a slaty nature, but of a soapy texture, which has fertilizing properties. Among the Cornish ornamental stones may be enumerated its serpentine or porphyry, marbles, talc, stalactites, and the asbestos and small gems: its fossils are of great variety, many of them beautiful in colour, and some clear and transparent, from which they have obtained the name of Cornish diamonds.

The abundance of Fish on the coast constitutes an important source of trade: the most esteemed species for the table, such as the turbot, dory, piper, sole, red mullet, whiting, &c., are plentiful; but the most important of the fisheries are those of mackerel, herrings, and pilchards, particularly of the last, which is peculiar to this coast, the opposite coast of Brittany, and that of the south of Ireland. After supplying the inhabitants with their winter stock, the great mass of pilchards are salted, after which the oil is pressed out of them, and they are then packed in hogsheads for exportation, principally to the ports of Italy. The chief stations of the pilchard fisheries at present are Fowey, Looe, Mewagissey, St. Mawes, the Coves of the Lizard, and in Mount's bay, on the south coast; and St. Ives and New Quay, on the north coast. Oysters are found in great abundance in the creeks of the Hel, and exported to the Medway, where they are laid down to fatten for the London market.

There are few branches of Manufacture, except such as relate to the smelting and preparation of the metals; the manufacture of carpets is carried on at Truro, and coarse woollen-cloths are made at Truro and Perran-Arworthal; there are iron-foundries at Perran wharf and Hale, and manufactories for gunpowder at Kennall Vale, in the parish of St. Stythians, and at Cosawes, in that of St. Gluvias. With regard to the state of the Harbours, the mouths of nearly all the tide rivers on the north coast have been almost choked with sand cast up by the surge, or drifted in by the north-westerly winds. The principal Rivers are, the Tamar, which forms, from the sea up to its source (excepting only for the space of about three miles), the boundary between this county and Devonshire, and is navigable up to New Quay, about 24 miles above Plymouth; the Lynher or Lynner, which becomes navigable at Noddetor, or Notter Bridge, and spreads into the Lynher creek, four miles below which it falls into the Tamar; the Tide, or Tidi, which becomes navigable two miles above St. Germans' creek, which forms a junction with the Lynher creek; the East Looe river, which is navigable up to Sand-place; the Duloe, a tributary of the East Looe, and navigable up to Trelawnwear; the Fawy, which becomes navigable, at high water, at Lostwithiel, three miles below which it joins the Leryn creek, and forms a wide and deep haven, falling into the sea below Fowey; the Fal, which about a mile below Tregoney spreads into a wide channel, and soon afterwards opens into the broad expanse of Falmouth harbour, through which it empties itself into the sea, being navigable in all its creeks; the Hel, which at high water becomes navigable at Gweek, and, being joined in the latter part of its course by several small creeks, forms Helford haven, within a mile below which it falls into the sea, through an estuary about a mile broad; the Heyl, which at St. Erth spreads into the estuary of Hayle, and the latter, two miles further, opens into St. Ives' bay; the Alan, or Camel, which is navigable up to Polbrock; and the Seaton.

A canal was constructed from Bude harbour to Thornbury, in the county of Devon, by a company formed in 1819, which has divers branches: from Red Post a branch, nineteen miles in length, extends down the western bank of the Tamar to Druyton Bridge, about three miles north of Launceston; and from Burmsdon there is a branch, nearly a mile and a half in length, up the west bank of the Tamar to Moreton Mill, where it receives a feeder from a reservoir on Langford Moor. In 1825, an act was obtained for the construction of the Liskeard and Looe canal, which commences at Tarras Pill, and terminates at Moorswater, being five miles and seven furlongs in length, and having twenty-five locks: there is a branch, about a mile in length, to Sand-place. In 1824, an act was obtained for making a railway from Redruth to Point Quay, in the parish of St. Feock, with several branches; also for restoring, improving, and maintaining the navigation of Restrongett creek. The road called the Redruth and Chacewater railway, commencing at the town of Redruth, proceeds in an easterly direction to Nangiles, where it is joined by a branch from the mines near Scorrier Hall. The Hayle railway, chiefly for the conveyance of minerals from that place to Redruth, with a branch to Portreath; is worked by locomotive engines and inclined planes, and joins the Redruth and Chacewater railway, which is worked by horses; the whole line is 12 miles in length, with a branch of $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles; the original capital raised for the construction of this work was £64,000, afterwards augmented to £80,000, at which cost it was completed. The Bodmin and Wadebridge railway, for the conveyance of minerals and passengers, was opened in 1834; the whole line is 12 miles in length, of one single track throughout; it is worked by locomotive engines at a speed of 8 miles per hour; the original capital raised for the construction of this railway was £22,500, afterwards increased to £30,500, and at present £35,500.

Cornwall abounds with rude monuments of its aboriginal inhabitants, much resembling those found in Ireland, Wales, and North Britain, consisting of large unwrought stones placed erect, either singly or in circles, or with others laid across, and of tumuli of stones or earth: the numerous circles of erect stones are generally termed Dawns-mén, "the stone dance." There are also two circular inclosures of stone, or earth, one at St. Just near the Land's End, and the other at Peranzabuloe, within which are rows of seats, having formed amphitheatres, originally designed for the exhibition of various sports, and where in later times, the Cornish plays were acted: these are called "rounds," or plan an quare, "the place of sport." Tumuli are found in all parts of the county. Another kind of rude stone monument, most probably sepulchral, is found in many places, viz., the cromlech, which consists of a large flat stone laid horizontally upon several others fixed upright in the ground, and is provincially called the "quoit," or the "giant's quoit." Celts have been found here more abundantly than in any other part of the kingdom. Several artificial caves, or subterranean passages, have been discovered, consisting of long galleries extending in various directions, formed of upright stones with others laid across. In 1749, a great number of gold coins, believed to be British, was found in the middle of the ridge of Carnbrê Hill. In several parts of the county may be seen rude stones of granite, with inscriptions, supposed to be ancient British, and some of them coeval with the time of the Romans. The other Roman antiquities consist mostly of coins, which of late years have been discovered in abundance in the western part of the county; and of spear-heads, swords, and other weapons of mixed metal, which have frequently been found in the ancient mines and stream-works. The situation of any of the Roman stations has not been ascertained. Ancient roads, or fragments of them, are visible in various parts of the county: one of these, believed to be British, traverses the hills, with barrows at intervals along its line, from the Land's End towards Stratton and the north of Cornwall, passing near the great British station of Carnbrê. Two Roman roads enter the county from Devonshire, one of which was a continuation of the great road from Dorchester and Exeter; the other appears to have led from Torrington and the northern part of Devonshire towards Stratton. Ancient camps and earthworks are here particularly abundant, the greater part of them being nearly round or oval. In many places along the coast a single vallum runs across from the edge of one cliff to that of another, with a ditch on the land side. There are considerable remains of a vallum called the "Giant's Hedge," which appears to have been originally about seven miles and a half in length, extending in an irregular line from the river Looe, a little above the town of West Looe, to Leryu.

Before the Reformation, there were about twenty Religious Establishments, including two alien houses, and one preceptory of the Knights Hospitallers; there were also eleven colleges and seven ancient hospitals; but the monastic remains are few, and, excepting those of St. German's priory, not remarkable. Small chapels, or oratories, erected over wells or springs to which extraordinary properties have been attributed, abound in most parts of the county, the greater part of them in ruins; and throughout the whole of it are ancient stone crosses, not only in the churchyards, but also on the moors, and in other solitary situations. There are also, particularly in the narrowest parts of the county, from St. Michael's Mount to the Land's End, remains of several rude circular buildings on the summits of hills, of very remote antiquity, and still denominated castles; also several cliff castles, formed by stone walls running across necks of land from one cliff to another on the sea coast. Of more regular fortresses the principal remains are those of the castles of Launceston, Carnbrê, Tintagel, Trematon, and Restormel, all of high antiquity, and the first believed to be of British origin. The most perfect specimen of ancient domestic architecture is Cothele House, built in the reign of Henry VII. Many of the houses of the landed proprietors are fine old family mansions, of very antique structure, though some of them have been altered, enlarged, and modernised. Notwithstanding the abundance and variety of the mineral strata, there are few springs possessing mineral properties, and those are chiefly chalybeate. The Cornish were formerly much addicted to sports and pastimes, especially to the miracle play, wrestling, and hurling, of which the practice of wrestling still prevails. Cornwall, as before noticed, gives the title of Duke to the eldest son of the Sovereign.

CORNWELL, a parish, in the union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (W.) from Chipping-Norton; containing 97 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £140.

CORNWOOD (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of PLYMPTON-ST. MARY, hundred of ERMINGTON, Ermington and Plympton, and S. divisions of DEVON; containing, with the village and post-town of Ivy-Bridge, 1080 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the river Yealm, and bounded on the north-east by the Erm; the surface is hilly, and the surrounding scenery is agreeably diversified and enlivened by numerous mountain streams. A large portion of the land is moor, comprising about 5000 acres, and, for 9 months in the year, appropriated to the pasture of large quantities of cattle and sheep. Granite is found in abundance, and extensively quarried for building. Cattle fairs are held on the first Monday in May, and the fourth Monday in September. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £33. 4. 7.; net income, £405; patron, Bishop of Exeter; impropiator, Sir J. L. Rogers. The glebe comprises about 80 acres. The church is in the ancient English style, and has three stone stalls and a piscina. There is a chapel for the district of Ivy-Bridge, at the extremity of the parish. A school on the national plan is supported by subscription, aided by an endowment of £10 per annum by the Rev. Duke Yonge, the late vicar, who also bequeathed £20 per annum for affording medical assistance to the poor; and two other schools are partly supported by the vicar. The Rook charity, comprising upwards of 27 acres, produces a rent of £44, which is distributed among the poor. The aunt of Sir Walter Raleigh resided at Fardd, in the parish.

CORNWORTHY (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of TOTNES, hundred of COLERIDGE, Stanborough and Coleridge, and S. divisions of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Totnes; containing 554 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the navigable river Dart, and separated from Ashprington by the river Harborne, which falls into the Dart. It comprises by estimation 1600 acres; the soil is fertile in some parts, in others poor; there are some good pastures, and productive orchards. About fifty persons are employed in the paper manufacture. There are quarries of limestone, which is raised for building purposes, but chiefly for burning into lime, and for the roads. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £210; patron and incumbent, Rev. Charles Barter; impropiators, Edward Holdelet, J. Peete, and H. Tucker, Esqrs. The church is a neat structure, in the later English style, and contains a monument to Sir Thomas Harrison. A school, now conducted on the national plan, was founded, in 1609, by Elizabeth Harris, and endowed by her with land producing about £25 per annum. Sir John Peters bequeathed a small sum from the great tithes, to be distributed to poor people; and there are some cottages erected on land given for that purpose by Sir Peter Edgecumbe. An ancient priory for seven nuns of the order of St. Augustine, said to have been founded by the ancestors of the family of Edgecumbe, and valued at the Dissolution at £63 per annum, formerly stood here: two of the arched gateways still remain.

CORPUSTY (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of AYLISHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 6 miles (W. N. W.) from Aylsham; containing 449 inhabitants. The parish is on the road from Norwich to Holt, and comprises by measurement 948 acres; the village is situated on the south side of a branch of the river Bure, on which is a flour-mill. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 12. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £62; patron, Bishop of Norwich; impropiator, J. R. Ives, Esq., whose tithes have been commuted for £256. The church, which stands on an eminence commanding very fine views, is chiefly in the decorated style, and consists of nave and chancel, with a square embattled tower; the nave is separated from the chancel by the remains of a carved screen, and there is a handsome sculptured font. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have each a place of worship.

CORRIDGE, a township, in the parish of HARTBURN, union of MORPETH, W. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 11 miles (W. by S.) from Morpeth; containing 22 inhabitants. The families of Aynsley, Robson, and Carr have held lands here. The township is divided into two farms, East and West, and comprises 329a. 1r. 19p., of which 67 acres are arable, 262 pasture, and the remainder woodland; the river Wansbeck passes on the north. A rent-charge of £24 is paid to the vicar of Hartburn.

CORRINGHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ORSETT, hundred of BARSTABLE, S. division of ESSEX, 3 miles (E.) from Horndon-on-the-Hill; containing 255 inhabitants. The parish is situated between Tilbury Fort and Canvey Island, and bounded on the south by the river Thames: at the time of the Norman survey it belonged to the Bishop of London. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £22. 13. 4.; patron and incumbent, Rev. W. R. Stephenson, whose tithes have been commuted for £830, and whose glebe contains 29 acres. The church, situated on the Green, is an ancient building, with a low tower, surmounted by a shingled spire.

CORRINGHAM (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of GAINSBOROUGH, wapentake of CORRINGHAM, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Gainsborough, on the road to Louth; comprising the hamlets of Aisby, Dunstall, and Yawthorpe, the township of Little Corringham, and the chapelry of Somerby; and containing 564 inhabitants, of whom 189 are in Little Corringham. This parish is in the Norman survey called Coringham, and is the head of a deanery, the original establishment of which, though not exactly known, must have been prior to the year 1100. Somerby Park is noticed in the survey under the name of Sumerdebi, a Saxon appellation, signifying the habitation or encampment of an army, and supposed to be derived from an ancient Roman camp near the spot, where was also a chapel, noticed in Bacon's Liber Regis as being annexed to Corringham, but now destroyed. Somerby Hall, one of the seats of the Rt. Hon. Sir John Becket, Bart., who is the principal landowner in the parish, and to whom the great tithes belong, has been the scene of many military exploits, especially during the civil war of the 17th century, when it was in the possession of the family of Fairfax. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Gainsborough, who was constituted Prebendary of Corringham, in the Cathedral of Lincoln, in the 3rd and 4th of the reign of Anne: the tithes of the prebendary have been commuted for £532. 12. 11., and those of the vicar for £170. 18. The church, which formerly belonged to the Knights Templars, is an ancient stone structure, in the Norman style, with later additions, and a Norman tower; the south doorway has a richly ornamented Norman arch, and there are also several within the church, which evidently consisted originally only of a nave and chancel. There are two places of worship for Wesleyans, and a parochial school. The remains of a Roman camp are visible at Somerby.

CORSCOMBE (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and hundred of BEAMINSTER, Bridport division of DORSET, 3½ miles (N. E.) from Beaminster; containing 810 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 5000 acres; the soil is various, in some parts chalky, in some clayey, and in others a rich black mould. The village is situated on the north side of a hill, and commands extensive views over the county of Somerset to the Bristol Channel, and the mountains of Wales. The Court-house, belonging to the lord of the manor, and now occupied as a farm-house, is nearly encompassed by a moat, over which was formerly a drawbridge. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 3. 4., and in the gift of W. Maskell, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £573, and the glebe comprises 61 acres. The church is a neat edifice, erected about the year 1675.

CORSE (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of NEWENT, Lower division of the hundred of WESTMINSTER, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 6 miles (N. N. W.) from Gloucester; containing 482 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises by measurement 1901 acres of land, is beautifully situated on the road from Gloucester to Ledbury, and has recently been improved by the inclosure of upwards of 1300 acres, that anciently abounded with wood, and were called "Corse Lawn." Stone is quarried for the building of cottages and the repair of roads. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, valued in the king's books at £6. 2. 9., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £443. The glebe consists of 5½ acres, with a glebe-house. The Wesleyans have a place of worship; and a sum of about £20 per annum, derived from land, is applied to charitable purposes.

CORSENSIDE, a parish, in the union of BELLINGHAM, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 17 miles (N. by W.) from Hexham; containing 1108 inhabitants. This place, anciently Crossan-set (the place of the crosses), lies on the Watling-street, and comprises by measurement 7840 acres, of which about 2500 are arable, 5000 pasture, and 340 wood. On the east and west sides the land is bleak, moorish, and sterile, but along the banks of the Rede the soil is light, dry, and gravelly, producing good crops of grass and corn; the surface is in general rugged in the extreme, and the scenery uninteresting, except during the summer, when, in the vicinity of the village of Woodburn, it becomes highly picturesque and beautiful. There are several quarries of excellent lime and freestone, and seams of coal in different places; and an extensive mine of iron-ore of superior quality was brought into operation about eight years since. An iron-foundry employs between 200 and 300 hands. The parish contains the beautiful hamlet of West Woodburn, and that of East Woodburn, the latter of which is chiefly remarkable for having been the residence of the distinguished family of de Lisle. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, in 1736, by the Aynsley family, and in the patronage of Messrs. Tweddell: the tithes have been commuted for £184, and the glebe consists of 84 acres, to which is attached a good glebe-house. The church is a small ancient edifice: one of the Umfrevilles gave the advowson and appropriation of it to the convent of Halystone, which, about 1240, held "Cressenset" in pure alms, of Gilbert de Umfreville. There is a parochial school. A large quantity of iron-ore, supposed to have been dug up by the Romans, who had iron-works here, was found on the surface near the parish borders; and tumuli are frequently met with near the river, and many vases have been discovered. The Rede, which flows through the parish, confers the title of Redesdale on the Mitford family.—See CHESTERHOPE and RISINGHAM.

CORSHAM-REGIS (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union and hundred of CHIPPENHAM, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Chippenham; containing 3842 inhabitants. This place is of very considerable antiquity: it is recorded in the Saxon Chronicles that, in 1015, "King Ethelred lay sick at Cosham, and Alderman Edric collected an army there." According to the Norman survey it was held by Tosti, Earl of Northumberland, and at the Conquest became part of the royal possessions; and from the Malmesbury Chronicle, preserved in Leland's Collectanea, it appears that, in 1358, the king and queen spent all the summer at this place and at Marlborough. It comprises the royal manor and the manor of the rectory: the former was granted, in the reign of Henry III., by Richard, Earl of Cornwall, to the tenants as farmers in fee, on condition of their paying the annual sum of 110 marks; and the original charter, which is deposited with the court rolls, is in excellent preservation. The bailiffs of this manor are chosen by the tenants from among themselves, and are invested with the powers of sheriff and coroner within the parish; and the tenants of the rectory manor owe suit and service to their court leet. The town principally consists of one long street, in which the houses, built chiefly of freestone, have a very neat appearance; the situation is dry and healthy, and the free access which the inhabitants have to Corsham Park renders it desirable as a place of residence. Corsham House, the seat of Lord Methuen, lord of the manor, who was raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Methuen, of Corsham, July 13th, 1838, was built on the site of the ancient palace, in 1582, and was considerably enlarged by the late Mr. Methuen, in order to receive the extensive gallery of pictures which had been collected by the late Sir Paul Methuen. The manufacture of woollen-cloths was formerly carried on, and in the last century had obtained some degree of celebrity, but it has, since that period, altogether disappeared. The market has been discontinued; but fairs for cattle are held on March 7th and September 4th. A new market-house, which is also a court-house, was built with a view of reviving the market, by P. C. Methuen, Esq., in 1784, in the centre of the town. The Great Western railway runs in the vicinity.

The parish comprises 6498*a. 3r. 14p.*, of which more than 2200 acres are arable, nearly 3800 pasture, and 228 woodland: the peasantry are partly occupied in raising stone from the numerous quarries in this parish and that of Box. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 16.; patron, Lord Methuen; impropiators, the Landowners. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £299. 10., and the vicar enjoys some peculiar privileges, and possesses an official seal. The church is an ancient structure, with a tower rising from four massive piers and arches in the centre, between the nave and the chancel, and formerly surmounted by a lofty spire, which, being deemed insecure, was taken down in 1812: the aisles are separated from the nave by low Norman pillars and small arches, of which, within the last few years, two on each side have been thrown into one. In the north aisle is a small chapel, divided from it by a stone screen of handsome design; and on the north-western side is the ecclesiastical or consistory court of the incumbent. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents. At the south-east entrance to the town is a free school, with an almshouse for six aged poor, built and endowed by Lady Margaret Hungerford, in 1668, and both under the superintendence of a master, who occupies a handsome lodge adjoining the schoolroom. The first master, appointed by Lady Hungerford, was the Rev. Edward Wells, vicar of the parish, and father of the learned author of Sacred Geography; and Mr. Hasted, the historian of the county of Kent, who died here in 1812, held the same appointment. A school-house was erected for the parish by the late Paul Cobb Methuen, Esq., in 1816: a boys' school on the Lancasterian system is supported by subscription; and a girls' school is maintained at the expense of Lady Methuen. Some valuable lands are vested in trustees for repairing the church, sustaining the poor in the parish dwelling, and for the repair of the bridges. Mr. Richard Kirby, of Islington, in 1672, bequeathed his interest in an estate near Dublin, to be distributed among eight poor persons; and Lady James' charity, producing £57. 8. 4. per annum from the three per cents., of which the parish receives two-thirds, is appropriated to the distribution of blankets and coats among the poor. Bishop Tanner states that here was an alien priory, and that William the Conqueror gave the church of this place to the abbey of St. Stephen, at Caen, in Normandy, which, as parcel of the late possessions of that foreign house, was assigned by Henry VI. to King's College, Cambridge; but he is at a loss to reconcile this fact with the gift of the church and other possessions in this place by Henry II. to the Benedictine monks of Marmonstier, in Tourrain, who had a cell here. During the wars with France, this alien priory was in the custody of the Bishop and Chapter of Exeter, and was given, in the 1st of Edward IV., towards the endowment of the monastery at Syon, and as parcel thereof was granted by James I. to Philip Moore; it was valued at £22. 13. 4. There was also a nunnery, which occupied the present site of the Methuen Arms inn.

CORSLEY (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union and hundred of WARMINSTER, Warminster and S. divisions of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Warminster; and containing 1621 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 2580 acres: stone for building and road-making is quarried; and the weaving of cloth employs about thirty persons. Fairs are held on Whit-Tuesday, and the first Monday in August, for cheese, pigs, and toys. The ancient manor-house, in which it is said Sir Walter Raleigh passed much of his time in concealment, is now occupied as a farm-house. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 0. 10.; net income, £215, arising chiefly from 98 acres of land, allotted, under an act for inclosing the parish, in 1780; patron and impropiator, Marquess of Bath. A very handsome church has been erected on the site of a former structure, at an expense of £3500, and was opened for divine service on the 22nd of October, 1833. On the summit of Clea Hill are remains of a strong intrenchment, to which the Danes are said to have fled from Edindon, where they had been attacked by Alfred, and to have sustained a fortnight's siege; and numerous fossils are found imbedded in the chalk, of which the hill consists.

CORSTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of KEYNSHAM, hundred of WELLOW, E. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W.) from Bath; containing 604 inhabitants. The river Avon bounds the parish on the north-east, and the Great Western railway intersects it; it comprises 1145 acres. Cornua ammonis and various petrified shells abound in the quarries. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 3. 9.; net income, £150; patron, Bishop of Bath and Wells; impropiator, Col. Gore Langton.

CORSTONE, a chapelry, in the parish, union, and hundred of MALMESBURY, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Malmesbury; containing 273 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to All Saints, exhibits some portions of early English architecture.

CORTON, a hamlet, in the parish of PORTISHAM, union of WEYMOUTH, hundred of UGSCOMBE, Dorchester division of DORSET, 6 miles (S. W.) from Dorchester. Here was formerly a chapel, which has long been desecrated, and converted into a barn.

CORTON (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, E. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (N.) from Lowestoft; containing 442 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises 1149*a. 1r. 39p.*, is situated on the coast of the North Sea, and has doubtless participated in the devastation occasioned by its encroachment upon the land, by which the adjoining parish of Newton has been almost destroyed. From the remains of a church still visible at a place called the Gate, and the ruins and old foundations of houses in other parts, the village of Corton is presumed to have been much more extensive than at present, and probably the resort of fishermen, when the mouth of Yarmouth harbour reached nearly to this place. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the patronage of the Crown; impropriators, Heirs of Thomas Fowler, Esq.: the great tithes have been commuted for £242, and the vicarial for £120. The church is partly in ruins, the porch and the walls of the nave being nearly overspread with ivy, but divine service is still performed in the chancel: from its beautiful tower, which is yet perfect, and serves as a landmark for mariners, and from its extensive ruins, there is reason to presume that it was a structure of much magnificence. Coins, fossils, &c., have been found within the base of the cliff, which borders on the sea, on its being undermined by the tide; and a stratum of oak, several feet thick, and extending in length more than 200 yards, was exposed to the view, after a severe storm, in 1812. About the same time, a part of the pelvis, or haunch bones, of the mammoth, together with other antediluvian remains, was found half a mile northward of the place.

CORTON, a township, in the parish of BOYTON, union of WARMINSTER, hundred of HEYTESBURY, Warminster and S. divisions of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Heytesbury; containing 205 inhabitants.

CORTON, a hamlet, in the parish of CLIFFE-PYPARD, union of CRICKLADE and WOOTTON-BASSET, hundred of KINGSBRIDGE, Swindon and N. divisions of WILTS, 5 miles (N. E.) from Calne. Here was formerly a chapel.

CORTON-DENHAM (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of HORETHORNE, E. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (N.) from Sherborne; containing 480 inhabitants. The parish is romantically situated in a valley at the foot of a range of hills, whereof the highest point is called Beacon Hill, or Corton-Ash Beacon, which rises 655 feet above the level of the sea; nearly the whole of the lands have been held by the ancestors of Lord Portman since about the year 1600. Large quantities of marl of rich quality are obtained, which is used as a good top dressing on high lands; and at the sides of Corton Hill is an immense mass of building-stone, but the great labour required to work it to a fine surface, on account of its veins of iron, renders it useless. There is a manufactory for dowlas. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Lord Portman: the tithes have been commuted for £366, and the glebe comprises $32\frac{1}{2}$ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a neat structure, and is supposed to have been built in 1541, and the tower, from a date over the entrance door, in 1685. There is a parochial school. Some workmen, in 1723, discovered a Roman urn in the vicinity, containing coins, in good preservation, of the emperors from Valerian and Gallienus to Probus; and there are traces of extensive fortifications about half way under the hill, which are thought to have been connected with South Cadbury Castle, about two miles distant.

CORYTON (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of TAVISTOCK, hundred of LIFTON, Lifton and S. divisions of DEVON, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Tavistock; containing 374 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 13. 9.; net income, £208; patron, Sir Robert Newman.

COSBY (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of BLABY, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 7 miles (S. S. W.) from Leicester; containing, with part of the hamlet of Little Thorpe, 1013 inhabitants. It comprises 2000 acres, consisting of arable and pasture land in about equal portions: the manufacture of stockings is carried on. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 15.; net income, £138, arising from land allotted under an inclosure act, in 1767, in lieu of tithes; patron, J. Pares, Esq.; impropriators, W. Hubbard, Esq., and others.

COSCOMB, a hamlet, in the parish of DIDBROOK, union of WINCHCOMB, Lower division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 18 inhabitants.

COSELEY, an ecclesiastical district, comprising the villages of Coseley and Brierley, with part of the village of Ettingshall, in the parish of SEDGLEY, union of DUDLEY, N. division of the hundred of SEISDON, S. division of the county of STAFFORD; and containing 6000 inhabitants. This place is situated in the heart of a district abounding with mines of coal and iron-stone; and the inhabitants are principally employed in the various branches of the iron trade and other works in the neighbourhood, and in the manufacture of nails and screws, which is carried on to a great extent. A new branch of the Birmingham canal has been recently cut from Wolverhampton, passing through the district. A church, dedicated to Our Blessed Saviour, was erected in 1829, at an expense of £10,537, by grant of the Parliamentary Commissioners, and is a spacious building, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower. The living is a district incumbency, in the patronage of the present Vicar of Sedgley during his life, and afterwards in that of Lord Ward; net income, £138. There are places of worship for Particular and General Baptists, Wesleyans, and Unitarians; and national schools were erected, in 1833, at an expense of £580.

COSFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of NEWBOLD-UPON-AVON, union of RUGBY, Rugby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Rugby; containing 82 inhabitants.

COSGROVE (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of POTTERSPURY, hundred of CLELEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 2 miles (N. N. E.) from Stony-Stratford; containing 701 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the border of Buckinghamshire, the Buckingham canal passing on its southern side and there joining the Grand Junction canal, which enters the county here, by crossing the Ouse near the confluence of the Tow with that river. It consists of 1559a. 1r. 33p., and the road from Northampton to Stony-Stratford intersects it. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 11. 3., and in the patronage of Mrs. Mansell; net income, £363. In digging for the Grand Junction canal, some skeletons were found here; also an earthen pot containing Roman coins, chiefly of the later emperors. There is a mineral spring in the parish.

COSMUS, ST., and DAMIAN-IN-THE-BLEAN (St. Cosmus and St. Damian), a parish, and the head of the union of BLEAN, in the hundred of WHITSTABLE, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W. by N.) from Canterbury; containing 606 inhabitants. This parish, which includes some lands belonging to the Master of Eastbridge Hospital, and others held under the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, all tithe-free, is intersected by the Canterbury and Whitstable railroad, and comprises 2260a. 1r. 15p., of which 704 acres are arable, 347 pasture, 657 wood, and 26 hop-grounds. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Master of the Hospital: the tithes have been commuted for £537, and the glebe comprises 3 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Mrs. Legett, in 1827, bequeathed £75 three per cents., the dividends of which are distributed among the poor. The union of Blean comprises 16 parishes or places, and contains a population of 13,745.

COSSAL (St. CATHERINE), a parish, in the union of BASFORD, S. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 6½ miles (W. N. W.) from Nottingham; containing 334 inhabitants. The Nottingham canal proceeds through this parish to the northward, in a serpentine direction; and the river Erewash runs on the west side, separating it from Derbyshire. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Wollaton. In the village is an hospital, founded by the ancient family of Willoughby, for four old men and four women.

COSSEY, or COSTESSEY (St. EDMUND), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of FOREHOE, E. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Norwich; containing 1074 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the north by the river Wensum, and comprises 3040 acres, of which 1500 are arable, 640 meadow and pasture, 550 woodland, and the remainder common and waste. Cossey Hall, the seat of Lord Stafford, lord of the manor, is a spacious quadrangular mansion, erected by Sir Henry Jerningham, Bart., and contains many stately apartments; it is situated in a well-wooded park, and contiguous to the house is the family chapel, dedicated to St. Augustine, and richly embellished with stained glass. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Trustees of the Great Hospital, Norwich: the tithes have been commuted for £337, and the glebe comprises 60 acres. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, surmounted by a spire. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and a Roman Catholic chapel, in the early English style, to which a schoolroom is attached, was erected in 1841. A national school is supported by subscription.

COSSINGTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BARROW-UPON-SOAR, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 2 miles (S. E. by E.) from Mountsorrel; containing 310 inhabitants. It is bounded by the rivers Soar and Wreake, and comprises by computation 1500 acres, about two-thirds of which are arable, and the rest pasture, with the exception of 20 acres of woodland; the soil, though various, is fertile and productive, and the surface is elevated, but in some parts flat, and subject to inundation from the rivers. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 7. 6.; net income, £449; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. Babington. Near the Wreake is a large oblong tumulus, 350 feet long, 120 broad, and 40 high, and very steep, called Shipley Hill, and supposed to be the monument of some Danish king.

COSSINGTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of WHITLEY, W. division of SOMERSET, 4¼ miles (N. E. by E.) from Bridgwater; containing 248 inhabitants. The village is one of the neatest in the county, the cottages being fitted up in a tasteful style, and the gardens ornamentally laid out. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 10.; net income, £254; patron and incumbent, Rev. T. Hobbs.

COSTOCK, or CORTLINGSTOCK (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of LOUGHBOROUGH, S. division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from Loughborough; containing 470 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the road between Nottingham and Leicester, in a valley extending in a direction from east to west, between hills that inclose it on each side, and is watered by a brook which divides it into two nearly equal parts: it comprises by computation 1500 acres, of which about one-third is wold, and the remainder in nearly equal portions arable and pasture land. Limestone is quarried for the uses of agriculture and building, and for the repairs of roads. About thirty persons are employed in stocking-making, and a few women in spotting and running lace. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 18. 4.; net income, £395; patron, Rev. Dr. Sutton. The tithes were commuted for land in 1760, about 450 acres still remaining subject to tithe; there is a good glebe-house, with about 200 acres of land. The church, which is supposed to have been built about the year 1300, appears to have lost much of its ancient beauty, having been probably desecrated during the troubles of the seventeenth century; it is now a plain edifice, the principal ornament of which is an eastern window in the chancel. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school on the national plan was erected in 1840.

COSTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 3½ miles (S. E.) from Waltham; containing 147 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 1800 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 6. 3., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £360. The church is a handsome structure, in the early and decorated English styles, with a tower surmounted by a handsome spire, in the later English style.

COSTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of FOREHOE, E. division of NORFOLK, 4½ miles (N. W.) from Wymondham; containing 48 inhabitants. It comprises 345 acres, of which 243 are arable, 90 meadow and pasture, and 9 woodland. The living is a rectory, in the patronage of the Bishop of Norwich: the tithes have been commuted for £93, and the glebe comprises about 8 acres. The church is in the early English style, with a square embattled tower.

COSTON-HACKET (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of BROMSGROVE, Upper division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, Northfield and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 6 miles (N. E.) from Bromsgrove; containing 211 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1251 acres of variable land, of which 600 are arable, 460 pasture, 170 woodland, and 21 water. Part of the parish extends over a portion of the range of hills called Bromsgrove Lickey, commanding extensive views of the surrounding counties, and in several places it is ornamented with large quantities of oak and fir. The Birmingham and Gloucester railway passes through. The living is annexed to the rectory of Northfield: the tithes have been commuted for £244, and the glebe consists of 56 acres. The church is a small edifice, with a bell gable, having some decorated portions in the later English style. There is an excellent Sunday school. Partly here, and partly in the parish of King's-Norton, lies Groveley, the residence, beautifully situated, of John Merry, Esq. Charles I. slept at Cofton Hall, now a farm-house, in the parish, on the 14th of May, 1645, the day when Hawksley House was taken.

COTCLIFF, an extra-parochial district, in the parish of LEAKE, union of NORTH-ALLERTON, wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, N. riding of YORK, 4 miles (E. by S.) from North-Allerton; containing 15 inhabitants. This place is situated on the east bank of the small river Coldbeck, and consists of an extensive acclivity, terminating in a boldly rising cliff, which is well wooded: the Bishop of Ripon is lord of the manor and owner of the soil.

COTE, a tything, in the parish of OLVESTON, union of THORNBURY, Lower division of the hundred of LANGLEY and SWINEHEAD, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 17 inhabitants.

COTE, with ASTON, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of BAMPTON, union of WITNEY, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Bampton; containing 727 inhabitants, of whom 204 are in Cote.

COTES, a hamlet, in the parish of PRESTWOLD, union of LOUGHBOROUGH, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by E.) from Loughborough; containing 75 inhabitants.

COTES, a township, in the parish of ECCLESHALL, union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD; containing 328 inhabitants. The Grand Junction railway passes through it.

COTES-DE-VAL, a hamlet, in the parish of KIMCOTE, union of LUTTERWORTH, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Lutterworth; containing 6 inhabitants.

COTGRAVE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union, and S. division of the wapentake, of BINGHAM, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 6 miles (S. E. by E.) from Nottingham; containing, with the hamlet of Stragglethorpe, 850 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3500*a.* 2*r.* 35*p.*, exclusively of 102 acres of roads; a portion called the Wold, formerly an uncultivated tract, has been converted into rich arable land; the greater part of the surface is flat; the soil is partly a tenacious clay, and partly a rich loam, and the high grounds on each side of the village abound in blue marl, intermixed with layers of red clay. Limestone of the blue lias formation is abundant, and is quarried for building and the roads, and also for burning into lime, and gypsum is also found. The Nottingham and Grantham canal intersects the parish. The "Court of St. John of Jerusalem," which was anciently held at Shelford, under the prior of St. John of Jerusalem, and then styled the "Master and Lieutenant's Court of Shelford," is held here, and has a common seal: its jurisdiction extends over various parishes for which places all wills are proved in this court, and to the tenants of which charters of exemption from toll throughout the king's dominions are granted. The living is a rectory, consisting of two consolidated medietyes, the first valued in the king's books at £10. 7. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$., and the second at £9. 14. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £628; patron, Earl Manvers. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1790; the glebe consists of 555 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a handsome structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles, and surmounted by a lofty octangular spire; the nave is parted from the aisles by slender clustered columns, and lighted by an elegant range of clerestory windows. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school is supported.

COTHAM, a hamlet, in the parish of KEELBY, union of CAISTOR, E. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 9 miles (N. W. by W.) from Great Grimsby. In the reign of Stephen, Alan Muncels, or Munceaux, built here a Cistercian nunnery, in honour of the Virgin Mary, in which, at the suppression, were a prioress and twelve nuns, whose revenue was estimated at £46 per annum.

COTHAM (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union, and S. division of the wapentake, of NEWARK, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 4 miles (S.) from Newark; containing 87 inhabitants. The living is a donative, valued in the king's books at £7. 18.; net income, £35; patron, Duke of Portland. The church was partly rebuilt in 1831.

COTHELSTON, a parish, in the union of TAUNTON, hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, W. division of SOMERSET, 7 miles (N. W. by N.) from Taunton; containing 104 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road to Bridgwater. Limestone strata of blue lias are found; and some indications of copper being observed, an attempt at mining was made, but soon discontinued. Cothelston Hill is 1250 feet above the level of the sea, commanding an extensive view over eleven counties; on the summit is a round tower of great antiquity. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £58; patron, Vicar of Kingston, to which church it was once a daughter church: the tithes are appropriate to the Dean and Chapter of Bristol, and have been commuted for a rent-charge of £68. The church contains some interesting monuments to the Stowells, formerly possessors of the manor, which are placed in an aisle now belonging to the family of Esdaile.

COTHERIDGE (ST. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of MARTLEY, Upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W.) from Worcester, on the road to Bromyard; containing 228 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south by the river Teame, and consists of 2162 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £5. 16. 8.; patron and incumbent, Rev. R. Berkeley. Sir Rowland Berkeley, in 1694, gave a rent-charge of £6 for apprenticing children.

COTHERSTON, a township, in the parish of ROMALD-KIRK, union of TEESDALE, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of YORK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Barnard-Castle; containing 566 inhabitants. The village is pleasantly situated on the south bank of the Tees, and is celebrated for the making of cheese, similar in quality to "Stilton." There is a manufactory for carpets. Here are the remains of a castle that formerly belonged to the Fitz-Hughs, lords of the manor, but was destroyed in one of the devastating inroads of the Scots. The tithes have been commuted for £108. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans; and a national school.

COTHILL, a hamlet, in the parish of MARCHAM, union of ABINGDON, hundred of OCK, county of BERKS; containing 45 inhabitants.

COTLEIGH, a parish, in the union of HONITON, hundred of COLYTON, Honiton and S. divisions of DEVON, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Honiton; containing 269 inhabitants. It comprises 1216*a.* 18*p.*, of which 561 acres are arable, 625 pasture, and 30 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9; patron and incumbent, Rev. W. Michell: the tithes have been commuted for £200, and the glebe consists of 23 acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

COTNESS, a township, in the parish and union of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, E. riding of YORK, 5 miles (S. E.) from Howden; containing 38 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 240 acres, exclusive of about 250 acres on Walling fen: the river Ouse passes on the south.

COTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of CHESTERTON, hundred of WETHERLEY, county of CAMBRIDGE, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Cambridge; containing 307 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 12. 11.; net income, £213; patrons, Master and Fellows of Catherine Hall, Cambridge. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1799. Dr. Andrew Downes, Greek professor at Cambridge, and translator of the Apocrypha, died here in 1627.

COTON, a township, in the parish of HANBURY, union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 6½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Uttoxeter; containing 72 inhabitants. William Wollaston, author of The Religion of Nature Delineated, was born here in 1650.

COTON, with HOPTON, a township, in the parish of ST. MARY and ST. CHAD, STAFFORD, S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, union, and N. division of the county, of STAFFORD, 5½ miles (E. by S.) from Stone; containing 464 inhabitants. Here is situated the Staffordshire General Lunatic Asylum.

COTON-IN-THE-ELMS, a township, in the parish of LULLINGTON, union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY, 6¼ miles (S. by W.) from Burton; containing 351 inhabitants. The township comprises 1176*a.* 1*r.* 34*p.* The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £230. A school is chiefly supported by the Horton family, who allow the master £30 per annum.

COTTAM, with LEA, ASETON, and INGOL, a township, in the parish and union of PRESTON, hundred of AMOUDERNES, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Preston; containing 710 inhabitants. There is a Roman Catholic chapel.

COTTAM, a chapelry, in the parish of SOUTH LEVERTON, union of EAST RETFORD, North-Clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 8 miles (E. by S.) from East Retford; containing 89 inhabitants, and comprising 625 acres. The chapel is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

COTTAM, a chapelry, in the parish of LANGTOFT, union of DRIFFIELD, wapentake of DICKERING, E. riding of the county of YORK, 5½ miles (N. N. W.) from Great Driffield; containing 41 inhabitants. The chapelry comprises 2600 acres, of which 1800 are arable, meadow, pasture, and sheep-walks, and 800 rabbit warren. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Langtoft: the chapel is a small and very plain edifice.

COTTENHAM (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHESTERTON, locally in NORTHSTOW hundred, county of CAMBRIDGE, 6¾ miles (N.) from Cambridge; containing 1833 inhabitants. This place was the residence of the monks sent here by Geoffrey, Abbot of Crowland, and who first established a regular course of academical education at Cambridge. The village was nearly destroyed by an accidental fire, in 1676, which consumed more than two-thirds of the buildings. The parish comprises by measurement 7037 acres. The Adventurers' land, chiefly inclosed from the old river Ouse and the common adjoining, was sometimes subject to inundation, but, in consequence of late improvements, this has been in a great measure prevented; and acts for inclosing lands, and for draining certain fen lands and low grounds in the parish were passed in 1842. The dairies, which are numerous, are famed for producing excellent cheese. A branch of the old Ouse passes near the village, and meets the river Cam below Streatham. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £36. 15., and in the gift of the Bishop of Ely: the tithes have been commuted for £765, and the glebe comprises 133 acres. The church is a handsome structure, in the later English style. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. A school was founded, in 1703, by Mrs. Catharine Pepys, who gave a house, and £100 to purchase land, and it has several other small endowments. This is the birthplace of Archbishop Tenison, who died in 1715. Charles Christopher Pepys, the late lord high chancellor, was raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Cottenham, Jan. 16th, 1836.

COTTERED (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BUNTINGFORD, hundred of ODSEY, county of HERTFORD, 3 miles (W.) from Buntingford; containing 465 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1755 acres, and is intersected by a cross-road between Baldock and Buntingford. The living is a rectory, with that of Broadfield annexed, valued in the king's books at £20. 8. 6½.; net income, £348; patron W. Brown, Esq.: the tithes were commuted for 315 acres of land, under an inclosure act, in 1806, and there are 10 acres of ancient glebe, with a glebe-house. The church consists of a nave and chancel, in the later English style, but has, by various alterations, been deprived of its general unity of design; the interior contains a beautiful marble font, and is thought to be one of the neatest in the county. Schools in union with the National Society were built by Mr. Henry Soames, in 1829, and endowed with a rent-charge of £40.

COTTERSTOCK (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of OUNDLE, hundred of WILLYBROOK, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 2 miles (N. N. E.) from Oundle; containing 204 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the left bank of the river Nene, and consists of 675*a.* 2*r.* 6*p.* The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Glapthorn united; net income, £91; patron and impropiator, Earl of Westmorland: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1813. The church, with its tower, is an interesting edifice, exhibiting portions in every style of English architecture, and some remains of stained glass in the fine tracery of the windows: it anciently had a college for a provost, twelve chaplains, and two clerks, founded in 1336, by John Gifford, a canon in the cathedral of York; three stone stalls still remain in the chancel. In 1658, Clement Bellamy bequeathed land, producing about £20 per annum, for two exhibitions to scholars at Cambridge, and for apprenticing children, of which this parish is entitled to a fourth share.

COTTESBACH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LUTTERWORTH, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by W.) from Lutterworth; containing 82 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the Banbury and Lutterworth road, and intersected by the Midland-Counties' railway; it is bounded on the west by the Watling-street, and on the north-west by the little river Swift, and comprises by computation 1220 acres, which consist principally of rich pasture land, ornamented with oak, ash, and elm trees. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 6. 8.; net income, £106; patron and incumbent, Rev. R. Marriott: the glebe consists of about 25 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is in the decorated style. There is a school, partly supported by the incumbent. Several Roman antiquities were discovered in the vicinity of the Watling-street a few years ago, comprising spear-heads, urns, beads, clasps, skulls, &c.: in one part of the parish the springs have the quality of petrifying whatever falls into them. Dr. Edward Wells, author of the well-known Geography of the Old and New Testaments, and several other works, was rector of the parish for many years.

COTTESBROOK (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BRIXWORTH, hundred of GUILSBOROUGH, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Northampton; containing 252 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Northampton to Leicester and Lutterworth, and comprises 2780a. 2r. 28p.; the surface is diversified with hill and dale; the soil is generally clayey, and the lands, chiefly meadow and pasture, are watered by a brook which is one of the sources of the river Nene. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 0. 10., and in the gift of Sir James Hay Langham, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £646. 12., and the glebe consists of about 2 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is admired for its architecture, which is in the decorated style. An hospital for two widowers and six widows was founded by Sir James Langham, in 1651, and endowed with land, now producing £53 per annum. A cell of Præmonstratensian canons existed here, foundations of which have been dug up, the site appearing to have been surrounded by a moat.

COTTESFORD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BICESTER, hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (N.) from Bicester; containing 187 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £344; patrons, Provost and Fellows of Eton College.

COTTESMORE (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of OAKHAM, hundred of ALSTOE, county of RUTLAND, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Oakham; containing, with the chapelry of Barrow, 670 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from the great north road to Oakham, and comprises 3379a. 2r. 20p.; the surface is mostly flat, except on the west side, where it forms a hill of considerable elevation; the soil is in general a light clay, and in some parts a reddish loam, resting on red sandstone, or on limestone rock. The district is intersected by the Oakham canal. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £25. 16. 3.; net income, £893; patron, Lord Barham. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1799; the glebe comprises 785a. 3r. 29p., to which there is a glebe-house. At the hamlet of Burrow, in the parish, a very neat chapel of ease has been built by the Rev. H. W. Nevile; and schools on the national plan are supported by Lord Barham, the Earl of Lonsdale, and the clergyman. Richard Westbrook Baker, Esq., of agricultural celebrity, and who was presented with a valuable service of plate in 1841, as a testimonial of respect, by eleven hundred subscribers, has his residence in the parish.

COTTINGHAM (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of KETTERING, hundred of CORBY, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 2 miles (S. W. by W.) from Rockingham; containing, with the township of Middleton, 1033 inhabitants. The parish, bounded on the north by the river Welland, which divides it from Leicestershire, comprises by measurement 3487 acres, whereof about 3156 are arable and pasture, and about 331 woodland: the road from Rockingham to Market-Harborough crosses it. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £23. 7. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £426; patrons, Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The Wesleyans have a place of worship; and schools are partly supported by endowment. In an ancient record it is stated that a house for leprous persons existed here in the time of Henry III. A very massive ring of pure gold was found, in 1841, on the borders of Rockingham Forest, in the parish, apparently of great antiquity, and in good preservation; it is inscribed in Saxon characters with legends supposed to be of talismanic character, and was probably worn as an amulet.

COTTINGHAM (St. MARY THE VIRGIN), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of SCULCOATES, Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Hull; containing 2618 inhabitants. This place is of considerable antiquity, and was known as of some importance when Domesday book was compiled. Leland, in his Collectanea, states that William d'Estoteville, or Stuteville, sheriff of Yorkshire, entertained King John here, and obtained from that monarch, in the year 1200, permission to hold a market and fair, and to embattle and fortify his residence. This noble mansion, called Baynard Castle, continued for ages a distinguished monument of feudal grandeur; it was in the possession, successively, of the Stutevilles, the Bigods, and de Wakes, but in 1541 was destroyed by fire: it is stated, on credible authority, that Henry VIII. being at the time at Hull, and learning that the lady of Lord de Wake, the then owner of the castle, was remarkable for her beauty, sent to apprise her lord of his intention to dine with him on the following day; but Lord de Wake apprehending that the object of the king was the dishonour of his wife, directed his steward, on the night on which the intimation was received, to set fire to the castle, which was accordingly burnt to the ground, and the royal visit thus prevented. On the death of Lord de Wake without male issue, the lordship of Cottingham, with 4460 acres, came to the Duke of Richmond, the Earl of Westmorland, Lord Powis, and Lord Sarum, since which time the estate has been divided into four manors, whereof three have descended to the Haworths, of Hull-Bank House, in the parish, who also possess other estates at Newland and Hull-Bank. In the 15th of Edward II., Thomas, Lord de Wake, began to establish here a monastery for Augustine canons, which, about the year 1324, was removed to the extra-parochial liberty of Newton, or Howdenprice: its revenue at the Dissolution was estimated at £178. 0. 10.: there are no remains.

The parish comprises 9495*a.* 3*r.* 8*p.*, of which 4562 acres are arable, 4536 meadow and pasture, 144 wood, and 251 garden land, a large portion of the last being appropriated to the cultivation of vegetables and other horticultural produce for the market at Hull, which place is also, in a great measure, supplied with milk and butter from this neighbourhood. A great part of the parish is a level plain, lying between the wolds and the river Hull, which forms its eastern boundary, and separates it from the parishes of Sutton and Waghen, and about 2000 acres are upon the declivity of the hills, lying immediately upon limestone rock: there is a great diversity of soil, from a light gravel to a strong tenacious clay. On the bank of the river is the seat of Benjamin Haworth, Esq., approached by a noble avenue of elms, and within a mile of the high road from Hull to Beverley. The village is large, and very agreeably situated at the eastern foot of the wolds, and contains several highly respectable dwelling-houses: there are two breweries, and a carpet manufactory; and the Tweeddale Patent-Tile Company have lately erected very extensive works in a field, the property of Mr. Haworth, for the manufacture of bricks and tiles by steam, employing between fifty and sixty hands, and supplying draining tiles in great quantity to all parts of the country: the river Hull affords easy conveyance for agricultural produce, coal, lime, &c. The market and one of the fairs have been discontinued, but a fair is held on the festival of St. Martin.

The LIVING is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Skidby annexed, valued in the king's books at £106. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £124; appropriator, the Bishop of Chester: the tithes have been commuted for £968. 14. 10., and the glebe consists of 54 acres. The church is a spacious and handsome edifice, built in 1272, with a light and beautiful tower rising from the centre, and contains several elegant monuments, particularly those of the family of Burton, and in the chancel is an ancient tombstone to the memory of the founder, Nicholas de Stuteville; a neat Grecian monument to the memory of the late Benjamin B. Haworth has recently been erected. A small church was built, by subscription, at Newland, in 1833. There are places of worship for Independents, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans. A free school is principally supported from a bequest of land, now producing about £45 per annum, by Mr. Mark Kirby, in 1712; and another school is endowed with the interest of £100, bequeathed by Mr. Joseph Meadley. The national school was erected by the aid of a grant of £100 from the lords of the treasury, and £20 from the society in London. There are various minor benefactions for the poor, including a dole of £10, left by Mr. Robert Mills, for distribution at Christmas. The experiment of allotting small portions of land to poor families, with a view to assist their industry and relieve parishes of the burthen of poor-rates, was successfully adopted here in 1819, when the parish officers took a piece of land of 12 acres, which they divided into twenty equal parts, and sublet: by the culture of fruit and vegetables for the Hull market, many of the tenants made £20 a year, most became owners of cows and pigs, and all had comfortable homes; and it is calculated that £200 per annum were saved to the parish by a system which, from its happy results in this instance, invites a more extensive and general adoption. There are some remains of the ramparts and ditches of Baynard Castle. Adjoining the ancient road, called Keldgate, are some intermitting springs, which sometimes flow copiously after remaining quiescent for several years.

COTTINGWITH, EAST, a chapelry, in the parish of AUGHTON union of POCKLINGTON, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Pocklington; containing 308 inhabitants. It is situated on the left bank of the river Derwent, and comprises by computation 1140 acres of land, which were inclosed in 1773, at which time the tithes were commuted for allotments and a yearly modus. The chapel, rebuilt about 60 years since, is a neat edifice, with a tower, on which is a spherical cupola. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and the Society of Friends; and the poor have 18 acres of land, let for £28 per annum.

COTTINGWITH, WEST, a township, in the parish of THORGANBY, union of YORK, wapentake of OUSE and DERWENT, E. riding of YORK, $9\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from York; containing 201 inhabitants. This place is situated on the Derwent, and forms the northern portion of the long and straggling village of Thorganby. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an act of inclosure, in 1810.—See THORGANBY.

COTTLES, with LITTLE CHALFIELD, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union and hundred of BRADFORD, Westbury and N. divisions, and Trowbridge and Bradford subdivisions, of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Melksham; containing 41 inhabitants.

COTTON, a township, in the parish of SANDBACH, union of CONGLETON, hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Middlewich; containing 101 inhabitants. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £25. 5.

COTTON, a township, in the parish and union of WEM, Whitchurch division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD; N. division of SALOP; containing 439 inhabitants.

COTTON, a chapelry, in the parish of ALVETON, union of CHEADLE, S. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Cheadle; containing 519 inhabitants. It abounds with excellent limestone, of which extensive quarries are worked by the Trent and Mersey Canal Company. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £44; patron, Thomas Gilbert, Esq.; impropiator, John Bill, Esq. The chapel was built in 1795, at the expense of the late Thomas Gilbert, Esq., who endowed it, and left the payment of the repairs a perpetual charge upon his property.

COTTON (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union and hundred of HARTISMERE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from Stow-Market; containing 545 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1925 acres, of which the surface is in general flat, and the soil heavy. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 10. 2½.; patron and incumbent, Rev. Peter Eade: the tithes have been commuted for £480, and the glebe consists of 18½ acres, to which there is a glebe-house, much improved by the present incumbent. The church is a handsome structure, in the decorated style, with an embattled tower; there is a fine south porch and entrance; the nave is lighted by clerestory windows. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

COTTON, county of YORK.—See COTTAM.

COTTON, or COULTON, a township, in the parish of HOVINGHAM, union of HELMSLEY, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, 8 miles (S. by E.) from Helmsley; containing 158 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 990 acres of land: the village is situated to the east of the high road from Helmsley to Easingwold. There was anciently a chapel, but no traces of it now remain.

COTTON, ABBOTS, a township, in the parish of CHRISTLETON, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Chester; containing 15 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 212 acres.

COTTON, EDMUNDS, a township, in the parish of CHRISTLETON, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 4¼ miles (E. by S.) from Chester; containing 77 inhabitants. This place derives its name from Edmund de Cotton, to whom it formerly belonged; it comprises by measurement 560 acres.

COTTON-END, a hamlet, in the township of EAST-COTTS, parish of CARDINGTON, hundred of WIXAMTREE, union and county of BEDFORD; containing 508 inhabitants.

COTTON-FAR, a hamlet, in the parish and union of HARDINGSTONE, hundred of WYMERSLEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, ½ a mile (S.) from Northampton; containing 279 inhabitants. An hospital dedicated to St. Leonard, for a master and leprous brethren and sisters, is stated to have been founded here by William the Conqueror, and was under the superintendence of the mayor and burgesses of Northampton: its revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was estimated at £12. 6. 8.

COUGHTON, a hamlet, in the parish of WALFORD, union of ROSS, hundred of GREYTREE, county of HEREFORD, 2¾ miles (S. by E.) from Ross. Here was formerly a chapel, now in ruins.

COUGHTON (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of ALCESTER, Alcester division of the hundred of BARCHLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Alcester; containing, with the hamlet of Sambourn, 955 inhabitants. It lies in the western part of the county, on the border of Worcestershire, which bounds it on the west, and comprises 4079 acres; the river Arrow flows from north to south, and roads from Birmingham and Bromsgrove to Alcester unite within its limits. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 10. 7½.; net income, £161; patron and improPRIATOR, Sir W. Throckmorton, Bart.: the tithes were commuted for land in 1773. The church has been repaired, and 158 additional sittings have been provided. There is a place of worship for Roman Catholics.

COULDSMOUTH, with THOMPSON'S-WALLS, a township, in the parish of KIRK-NEWTON, union of GLENDALE, W. division of GLENDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7½ miles (W. by N.) from Wooler; containing 38 inhabitants. The township is a mountainous district, extending to the boundary of Scotland, half a mile east of Yetholm. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £56. 17. 6., and the vicarial for £17. 17.

COULSDON (St. John the Evangelist), a parish, in the union of CROYDON, First division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, E. division of SURREY, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Croydon; containing 1041 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the road from London to Brighton, occupies an elevated position, and commands extensive and varied prospects; it contains about 3400 acres, exclusively of 550 of down land, and the Brighton railway passes a little to the west. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 16. 5½., and in the gift of the Archbishop of Canterbury: the tithes have been commuted for £859, and the glebe comprises 80¾ acres. The church, consisting of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, with a tower and spire, has been thoroughly repaired and stuccoed, and is a very pleasing object. A school is chiefly supported by the rector. The Roman road out of Sussex passed through the parish: on Farthing Downs are dykes which seem to have been thrown up as a barricade, and on the high part of the downs are several small barrows.

COULSTON, EAST (St. Thomas à Becket), a parish, in the union of WESTBURY and WHORWELSDOWN, hundred of WHORWELSDOWN, Whorwelsdown and N. divisions of WILTS, 8 miles (S. W.) from Devizes; containing 105 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 864 acres, of which 276 are arable, 362 pasture, 168 down, and 9 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 14. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £175. 5., and the glebe consists of 31 acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

COULSTON, WEST, a tything, in the parish of EDINGTON, union of WESTBURY and WHORWELSDOWN, hundred of WHORWELSDOWN, Whorwelsdown and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 144 inhabitants.

COULTON (Holy Trinity), a parish, in the union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER; containing, with the chapelries of Haverthwaite and Rusland, and the parochial chapelry of Finsthwaite, 1983 inhabitants. East Coulton is 5½ miles (N. N. E.), and West Coulton 5 (N. by E.) from Ulverstone. This parish is bounded on the east and south by the lake Windermere, and the river Leven, which issues from it, and on the west by the lake Coniston, and the river Crake, which, with the Leven, falls into Morecambe bay: the road from Ulverstone to Kendal runs through the southern part of the parish, within the limits of which, at Backbarrow, extensive cotton-works are carried on; there are also iron-works, and works for the preparation of acid, and gunpowder. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £84; patrons and appropriators, the Landowners, who pay their quotas for the minister's stipend. There is a meeting-house for the Society of Friends; and a parochial school is endowed with 50 acres of land given by Adam Sandys, Esq., besides a small bequest from Bartholomew Pennington.

COULTON, or COLTON, a township, in the parish of HOVINGHAM, union of MALTON, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK; containing 158 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 990 acres of land: the village is situated to the south of Hovingham wood. Here was anciently a chapel, but no traces of it now remain.

COUND (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of ATCHAM, hundred of CONDOVER, S. division of SALOP, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Shrewsbury; containing, with the chapelry of Cressage, 808 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Shrewsbury to Worcester, and bounded on the north-east by the navigable river Severn; it abounds with richly diversified and wildly romantic scenery, and comprises by computation 5071 acres, of which 1543 belong to Cressage; the surface is slightly undulated. There are two quarries, from which is obtained a species of white freestone, recently used in rebuilding the chapel at Cressage. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £33, and in the patronage of Mrs. Frances Thursby: the tithes have been commuted for £619, and the glebe consists of 93 acres, with a glebe-house. The church is in the later English style, and contains monuments to the memory of the Cresset, Fowler, Dod, Wilde, and Langley families; the pulpit is a handsome specimen of ancient carved oak. Dr. Edward Cresset, Bishop of Llandaff, who had been rector of this parish, and possessed the principal property in it, lies buried here.

COUNDON, a township, in the parish of ST. ANDREW-AUCKLAND, union of AUCKLAND, N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 2 miles (E. by S.) from Bishop-Auckland; containing 475 inhabitants, when the census was taken in 1831, but now increased to 990, in consequence of the extended working of its coal-mines. A new church and parsonage-house have been erected, and the living endowed by the Bishop of Durham, and a district assigned, comprising the townships of Coundon, Windleston, and Westerton. There is also a school in union with the National Society.

COUNDON, a hamlet, in the parish of the HOLY TRINITY, COVENTRY, union of MERIDEN, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK; containing 181 inhabitants, and comprising 1000 acres. An act for inclosing waste lands was passed in 1841. The improper tithes have been commuted for £245.

COUNDON-GRANGE, a township, in the parish of ST. ANDREW-AUCKLAND, union of AUCKLAND, S. E. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Bishop-Auckland; containing 313 inhabitants. This place is situated on an eminence, and commands an extensive view of Wear-dale: the river Gaunless passes to the west of the hamlet. The improper tithes have been commuted for £93. 12. 9.

COUNTESS-THORP, a chapelry, in the parish and union of BLABY, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (S.) from Leicester; containing 815 inhabitants. It comprises 1200 acres of land, the soil of which is chiefly a strong clay: the manufacture of stockings is carried on. The chapel, dedicated to St. Andrew, was rebuilt in 1841, when 212 sittings were added.

COUNTHORPE, a hamlet, in the parish of BYTHAM-CASTLE, union of BOURNE, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Corby; containing 85 inhabitants.

COUNTISBURY (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BARNSTAPLE, hundred of SHERWELL, Braunton and N. divisions of DEVON, $15\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Ilfracombe; containing 185 inhabitants, and comprising 2940 acres. This parish, which is situated on the shore of the Bristol Channel, and near the junction of the counties of Devon and Somerset, is bounded for some miles on the south and west by the small, but rapid, river Lyn. The spring tides here rise to the height of 30 feet. The surrounding scenery is of bold and rugged character, softened occasionally by woodland and pastures. Stone of good quality is abundant, and is quarried for the use of the immediate neighbourhood. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Linton: the tithes have been commuted for £105, and the glebe comprises 14 acres.

COUPE and LENCHES, with NEW-HALLHEY and HALL-CARR, a township, in the parish of BURY, union of HASLINGDEN, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Haslingden; containing 1716 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for two rent-charges of £2. 12. 6., payable respectively to the rectors of Bury and Prestwick cum Oldham.

COUPLAND, a township, in the parish of KIRK-NEWTON, union of GLENDALE, W. division of GLENDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Wooler; containing 109 inhabitants. This place anciently gave name to its possessors, from whom it passed to the Muschamps, and subsequently to the Wallaces. In 1619, George Wallace built the Castle here, and his descendant, Ralph Wallace, disposed of the estate to Admiral Sir Chaloner Ogle; and Nathaniel Ogle, Esq., in 1806, sold it to Matthew Culley, Esq., the present proprietor. The township is bounded on the east by the river Till, and on the south-west by the Glen, and comprises about 800 acres, mostly arable land, with 70 acres of plantation; the surface is level, and the soil of a light gravelly quality. Coupland Castle, enlarged, in 1820, from a peel-house, of which the walls have been preserved, is the seat of Mr. Culley, whose father was one of the most eminent and successful farmers in the kingdom. The improper tithes have been commuted for £106. 10., and the vicarial for £40. 10.

COURAGE, a tything, in the parish of CHIEVELEY, union of NEWBURY, hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Newbury; containing 277 inhabitants. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £342.

COURT, a tything, in the parish of PORTBURY, union of BEDMINSTER, hundred of PORTBURY, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 59 inhabitants.

COURTEENHALL (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of HARDINGSTONE, hundred of WYMERSLEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Northampton; containing 143 inhabitants. This place is situated between the two roads from Northampton to London, one by Newport-Pagnell and the other by Stony-Stratford, and is within a mile of the Roade station of the London and Birmingham railway: the Grand Junction canal passes within two miles. The number of acres is 1314. There is a quarry of limestone, used for building and draining. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £300, and the glebe comprises 60 acres, to which is attached a glebe-house. The church, supposed to have been built about the year 1587, is a neat structure, having some fine arches in the later English style; on the north side is a handsome monument, representing in full length Sir Samuel Jones, the former possessor of the estate, who provided the church with a set of bells. A free grammar school for boys was founded, in 1680, by Sir Samuel, who bequeathed £500 for the erection of a school-house, and a rent-charge of £80 for the master, and another of £20 for the usher. The same benefactor likewise bequeathed £500 for repairing the church.

COURTWAY, a hamlet, in the parish of SPAXTON, union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of CANNINGTON, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 31 inhabitants.

COVE, a tything, in the parish of YATELEY, hundred of CRONDALL, Odiham and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 9 miles (E. N. E.) from Odiham; containing 433 inhabitants. It is within three-quarters of a mile of the Farnborough station of the London and Southampton railway.

COVE, CHAPEL, a chapelry, in PITT Quarter of the parish of TIVERTON, union and hundred of TIVERTON, Callompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (N.) from Tiverton. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

COVE, NORTH (St. Botolph), a parish, in the union and hundred of WANGFORD, E. division of the county of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Beccles; containing 219 inhabitants. This place is situated on the road from Beccles to Lowestoft, and comprises by computation 2000 acres: the navigable river Waveney separates it, on the north, from the county of Norfolk. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Willingham annexed, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £353: there are about 5 roods of glebe. The church is in the later English style, and has an embattled tower, and a rich Norman doorway at the southern entrance; the font is curiously sculptured. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a national school.

COVE, SOUTH (St. Lawrence), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (N.) from Southwold; containing 194 inhabitants, and comprising 1172 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 2. 11., and in the gift of Sir Thomas S. Gooch, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £267. 10.; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 13 acres. The church, an ancient edifice, has some remains of Norman architecture.

COVEHITHE.—See NORTH HALES.

COVEN, a liberty, in the parish of BREWOOD, union of PENKRIDGE, E. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (E. S. E.) from Brewood; containing 650 inhabitants. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal, and the Grand Junction railway, pass through the liberty. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a national school.

COVENEY (St. Peter), a parish, in the hundred of SOUTH WITCFORD, union and Isle of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE, 6 miles (W. N. W.) from Ely; containing, with the chapelry of Manea and the hamlet of Wardy-Hill, 1505 inhabitants. It stands on an eminence overlooking the fens. The manor anciently belonged to the monks of Ely, and having been for some time wrongfully withheld from them, was recovered by Bishop Nigell before the year 1169: among subsequent owners, occur the families of Lisle, Scrope, and Robinson. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5, and in the gift of Lord Rokeby, with a net income of £809: the tithes have been commuted for £227. 14.; and there is a glebe of 30 acres. The church is an ancient edifice, with a thatched roof. There is a national school supported by subscription; and about £50 per annum, the amount of various bequests, are distributed among the poor on St. Thomas's-day. Great numbers of oak, and a few other trees, have been discovered buried at various depths below the surface, and some almost petrified are found in various places.

COVENHAM (St. Bartholomew), commonly called CAWTHORPE, a parish, in the union of LOUTH, wapentake of LUDBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from Louth; containing 277 inhabitants. It comprises 1434*a. 1r. 28p.*, and is watered at its eastern extremity by the river Ludd, from which a canal runs to Tetney Haven, at the mouth of the Humber. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 12. 8.; net income, £287; patrons, Heirs of Sapsford Harold, Esq., for one turn, and of the Rev. C. D. Holland, for two turns. The tithes of this parish, and those of Covenham-St. Mary, were commuted for corn-rents, under an inclosure act, in 1793; the glebe consists of about 62 acres in this parish, and $2\frac{1}{2}$ in that of Grainthorpe. The church contains a curious octagonal font, much admired by antiquaries; and an effigy in metal stands in the chancel, of John Skypwyth, knight, who was interred here in July, 1415. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans.

COVENHAM (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, wapentake of LUDBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Louth; containing 169 inhabitants, and comprising 973*a. 1r. 26p.* The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £197. The church is an ancient edifice, with a tower. In 1842, two schoolrooms, with a house for the master, were built by subscription on a plot of ground, the gift of the Rev. H. B. Benson, for the education, on the national system, of the children of the parishes of Yarborough, Utterby, Fotherby, Little Grimsby, and Covenham St. Mary and St. Bartholomew. Here was formerly a cell belonging to the monastery of St. Carilephus, in the diocese of Mains.

COVENTRY, an ancient city, in the N. division of the county of WARWICK, 10 miles (N. E.) from Warwick, 18 (S E.) from Birmingham, and 91 (N. N. W.) from London, on the road to Holyhead; containing, with the hamlets of Radford, Whitley, and Keresley, 31,430 inhabitants. In ancient records this place is called Coventre and also Conventrey, probably from the foundation of a convent, of which St. Osberg was abess in the year 1016, when it was burnt by Canute, King of Denmark, and Edric the traitor, who, having invaded Mercia, destroyed many towns in Warwickshire. On the site of this convent, Leofric, Earl of Mercia, and his countess Godiva, about the beginning of the reign of Edward the Confessor, erected a monastery, which they munificently endowed, and decorated with such a profusion of costly ornaments, that, according to William of Malmsbury, the walls were covered with gold and silver. About this time, Leofric, at the intercession of his countess, granted the citizens a charter conferring various privileges and immunities, which is commemorated in the south window of Trinity church, by portraits of the earl and countess, with a poetical legend. Leofric died in 1057, and was interred in the monastery which he had founded. Shortly after the Norman Conquest, the lordship of Coventry became vested in the earls of Chester, of whom Ralph, the third earl of that name, married Lucia, grand-daughter of Leofric. Their son Ralph, having espoused the cause of the Empress Matilda, his castle of Coventry was occupied by the forces of Stephen: the earl besieged it, but the king came in person to its relief, and repulsed him after an obstinate conflict. In 1141, Robert Marmion, the inveterate enemy of the Earl of Chester, took possession of this monastery, from which he expelled the monks, fortified the church, and cut deep trenches in the adjoining fields, concealing them only with a slight covering: on the earl's approach to dislodge him, Marmion drew out his forces, but forgetting the exact situation of the trenches, his horse fell with him to the ground, and in this situation his head was severed from his body by a private soldier. In the reign of Henry III. the twelve noblemen and prelates elected to decide upon the terms by which such as had forfeited their estates during the baronial war might be again admitted to enjoy them, met here; and their decree is called the Dictum de Kenilworth, from its having been published in the king's camp at Kenilworth, during his siege of the castle, in 1266. In 1355 was commenced the erection of the city walls, which were of great height and thickness, and subsequently extended to three miles in circuit; they were strengthened with thirty-two towers, and contained twelve principal gates, each defended by a portecullis. In 1397, Richard II. appointed this town for the decision, by single combat, of the quarrel between the Dukes of Hereford and Norfolk; and magnificent preparations were made on Gosford Green for this encounter, which, however, was prevented by the banishment of the combatants, a measure which ultimately caused the deposition of the king. In 1404, the Duke of Hereford, who had become Duke of Lancaster, by the death of his father, John of Gaunt, on his return from exile, having succeeded to the crown by the title of Henry IV., held a parliament here in the great chamber of the priory, which, from the exclusion of all lawyers, was called Parliamentum Indocorum. In 1411, the Prince of Wales, afterwards Henry V., was arrested at the priory by John Horneby, mayor of the city, probably for some tumultuous excess, the particulars of which are not recorded. In 1459, Henry VI. held a parliament in the chapter-house of the priory, which, from the number of attainders passed against the Duke of York and others, was, by the Yorkists, called Parliamentum Diabolicum; the acts made in it were annulled by the succeeding parliament. In 1467, Edward IV. and his queen kept the festival of Christmas at Coventry; and two years after, Earl Rivers and his son, who had both been seized by a party of the northern rebels at Grafton, were beheaded on Gosford Green, to the east of the city. In the war between the houses of York and Lancaster, Richard, Earl of Warwick, marched with all his ordnance and warlike stores into this city, where he remained for a short time, during which Edward IV., on his route from Leicester, attempted to force an entrance; but, being repulsed, he passed on to Warwick, and thence to London; and having gained the battle of Barnet, in which the Earl of Warwick was slain, and that near Tewkesbury shortly after, he returned to Coventry, and deprived the citizens of their charter, for the restoration of which they were compelled to pay a fine of 500 marks. In 1474, Edward IV. and his queen kept the festival of St. George here; and subsequently, in 1485, Henry VII., on his route from Bosworth Field, was received here with every demonstration of congratulation and respect.

In the early part of the sixteenth century, Coventry became the theatre of religious persecution: the Bishop of Chester, coming to examine persons accused of heresy, condemned seven to the stake, which sentence was executed in the little park. In 1554, Mr. Hopkins, sheriff for the city, was confined in the Fleet prison, on a charge of heresy, but was liberated after great intercession, and fled the kingdom; and in the following year Mr. Laurence Saunders, Robert Glover, A.M., and Cornelius Bongey, were burnt for their religious tenets. In 1565, Queen Elizabeth visited the city; and in 1569, Mary, Queen of Scots, on her removal from Tutbury Castle for greater security, was for some time at the Bull Inn, in the custody of the Earls of Shrewsbury and Huntingdon. In 1607, the city suffered considerable damage from an inundation, which entered 257 houses, washing away furniture and property of various kinds: the flood rose to the height of three yards, and, after remaining for three or four hours, suddenly subsided; clusters of white snails were afterwards found in the houses and in the trees, supposed to have collected prior to the influx of the water, which, though observed at the distance of nearly a mile from the town, was so instantaneous in its approach, as to preclude all means of precaution. King James, attended by a large retinue of the nobility, visited the city in 1617, on which occasion a cup of pure gold, weighing 45 ounces, and containing £100, was presented to him by the corporation, which his majesty ordered to be preserved with the royal plate for the heirs of the crown. During the parliamentary war, Charles I., having erected his standard at Nottingham in 1641, and taken the city of Leicester, sent orders to the mayor and sheriffs of Coventry to attend him at that place; but the majority of the citizens embraced the cause of the parliament, and a party having obtained possession of the magazine in Spon Tower, which the Earl of Northampton had directed the aldermen to secure for the royalists, kept it for Lord Brooke, who removed it to Warwick Castle. The parliamentary party in the city, being reinforced with 400 men from Birmingham, held it against the king, who sent a herald to demand entrance, which being refused, some cannon were planted in the great park and on Stivichall Hill, which played upon the town, but without effect. Finding the citizens resolved to defend their gates, and learning that Lord Brooke was approaching with his army from London, the king drew off his forces, and the city was now regularly garrisoned by the parliament, and further preparations made for its defence: the women were employed to fill up the quarries in the park, that they might not afford any shelter to the royal troops; and for this purpose they assembled in companies, by beat of drum, and marched in military array, with mattocks and spades, headed by an amazon who carried an Herculean club on her shoulder. On the restoration of Charles II., that monarch was proclaimed by the mayor and aldermen, attended by a vast concourse of the inhabitants, with the most triumphant acclamation: the greatest rejoicings took place, and the public conduits of the city were made to flow with wine: a deputation was sent to present to him a basin and ewer, and 50 pieces of gold, and to restore all the king's lands. In the year 1662, the Earl of Northampton, with a large retinue of the neighbouring gentry, and a detachment of the county troops, was sent with a commission from the king to make a breach in the walls, as a punishment to the inhabitants for shutting their gates against his father; but the earl so far exceeded the limits of his commission as to leave only a few fragments of them remaining: of the gates, which were only dismantled, there are some yet standing, of which the Bastille, Swanswell, and Cook-street gates are the most entire.

The CITY is pleasantly situated on a gentle eminence, bounded on the north-east by the river Sherbourne and the Radford brook, which, running from north to south, unite within the town. Till of late, the houses were generally in the style of the fifteenth century, built of timber frame-work and brick, with the upper stories projecting, and presenting a dark and sombre appearance, and the streets were narrow and but partially paved; but the town has undergone great improvement, the more ancient parts having been taken down and rebuilt in a modern style. The suburbs have, within the last few years, been greatly extended; several new streets have been formed, and ranges of handsome houses erected; and the whole is well paved, and lighted with gas: the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from conduits made by the corporation, and by water-works. The environs are pleasant, abounding with interesting scenery, and with some agreeable promenades. The public library, established in 1791, has a proprietary of about 200 members, and is well regulated by a committee: the theatre, a neat and conveniently arranged building, is opened occasionally; and assemblies and concerts take place periodically at St.

Mary's and Drapers' halls. The barracks, erected in 1792, on the site of the old Bull inn, (where Henry VII. slept on his route from the victory of Bosworth Field,) are a handsome range of building, fronted with stone, and ornamented with the royal arms over the principal gateway; the establishment is for a field officer and fifteen subalterns, and comprises a riding-house, an hospital, and stabling for 188 horses. The making of caps was the principal TRADE of the town prior to the year 1436, when the manufacture of woollen and broad cloth was introduced, and continued to flourish till the end of the sixteenth century: at this time Coventry was celebrated for a superior blue dye, which from the permanence of its colour, obtained the appellation of "Coventry true blue." About the beginning of the eighteenth century, striped and mixed tammies, camlets, shalloons, and calimancoes, were manufactured to a considerable extent, to which succeeded the throwing of silk, the weaving of gauze, broad silks, and ribbon, and the manufacture of watches. The weaving of ribbon at present forms the staple trade: a vast supply is furnished weekly to the wholesale houses in London, and to every part of the united kingdom, by means of commercial agents, and large quantities are exported. In 1808 there were 2819 silk and ribbon looms in the city alone, exclusively of those in the adjacent villages; but since that time the number has considerably increased, affording employment to nearly 16,000 persons in the city and suburbs; and from the introduction of the French looms and machinery, an infinite variety in the pattern, and an elegance in the texture, have been attained, which give a distinguished superiority to the ribbon manufactured here. The manufacture of watches, for which Coventry was so long celebrated, has of late undergone great improvement; and many gold watches of superior construction are supplied to the first houses in that branch of trade. The situation of the town is peculiarly advantageous for trade, being central to the ports of London, Liverpool, Bristol, and Hull, and having by means of the Oxford and Coventry canals, which form a junction at a short distance to the north, a direct communication with the manufacturing districts of Lancashire and Yorkshire. On the south side of the town is a first-class station of the London and Birmingham railway. The market, which is on Friday, is held in various parts of the town; for corn, in the Cross-cheaping, now a spacious area enlarged by the removal of a middle range of old houses, by which it was divided, and in which was the ancient cross, one of the most beautiful in the kingdom, built by Sir William Holles, Knt., in 1544, and taken down in 1771; for cattle, in Bishop-street; for pigs, in Cook-street; and for butter, eggs, and poultry, in an area behind the mayor's parlour, or police-office, where a market-house has been erected. Fairs for three days each commence April 21st, Aug. 16th, and Oct. 21st, for cattle and merchandise: to these fairs are attached courts of pie-powder, and the corporation is entitled to the same tolls as are taken at Smithfield market, in London. The great show-fair takes place on the Friday after Corpus Christi-day, and continues for eight days, on the first of which the commemoration of Lady Godiva's procession is occasionally revived, by a representative obtained for that purpose. This ceremony has its origin in a tradition that the citizens having been greatly oppressed by the severe exactions imposed upon them by Leofric, his countess undertook to intercede for their relief, but was apparently frustrated in her suit by a promise of exemption only upon the condition of her riding naked through the city on horseback: it is further recorded in the traditionary legends of the city, that, having obtained her husband's permission, and trusting for concealment to the length of her hair, and to the discretion of the inhabitants, who were ordered, upon pain of death, to shut themselves up in their houses, she performed the task, and obtained for the city a charter of "freedom from servitude, evil customs, and exactions." The tradition also records that a tailor, who disobeyed the injunction, was instantly struck blind; and a figure, called Peeping Tom, carved in wood, and placed in an opening at the corner of a house in High-street, is still preserved in memory of this event, which has become closely interwoven with the history of the place, though not invented till the time of Charles II.

Ranulph, Earl of Chester, in the reign of Henry II., granted a CHARTER to the inhabitants, confirming their possessions in free burgage as they held them in the time of his father and ancestors, with liberty to elect a bailiff, and to have a portmote, or town court of record, in which the bailiff should preside for the trial of all pleas amongst themselves; bestowing on them, also, all such freedoms as the burgesses of Lincoln enjoyed. This charter was confirmed by the reigning sovereign, but in a subsequent charter, granted by Edward III., Coventry, with a considerable district around it, was termed a city, and liberty was given to elect a mayor and two bailiffs, who presided in the portmote, which was from that time called the court of the mayor and bailiffs, and continued to exercise the same jurisdiction down to the year 1842, when an act was passed re-annexing the city to Warwickshire. Henry VI. made the bailiffs sheriffs also, and converted the city into a county, separating it from the county of Warwick, and conferring many other privileges. Under the last charter, that of James I., the corporation consisted of a mayor, 10 aldermen, a council of 31, a recorder, two sheriffs and bailiffs, a coroner, steward (always a barrister), two chamberlains, two wardens, a town-clerk, sword-bearer, mace-bearer, and subordinate officers. By the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, the government is now vested in a mayor, 10 aldermen, and 30 councillors, and the council appoint a sheriff. The city is divided into 5 wards, instead of 10 as formerly, and comprises 13 fraternities, or trading companies, the numbers of which, with the exception of the Drapers' company, who still retain their hall, have been greatly reduced. There are 19 justices of the peace, and a police force, consisting of a superintendent, inspector, sergeant, and 16 constables. The freedom is obtained by a servitude of seven years to any branch of trade within the city and liberties. Among the privileges enjoyed by the freemen is that of depasturing cattle upon the "Lammas Grounds," a tract of about

Corporation Seal.

1000 acres, appropriated to that use from Lammas to Candlemas by especial grant. The city first exercised the elective franchise in the 26th of Edward I., but there were partial intermissions until the 31st of Henry VI., since which time it has regularly returned two members to parliament. The right of election was formerly vested in the freemen, in number about 3000; but, by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the non-resident freemen, except within seven miles, were disfranchised, and the privilege was extended to £10 householders within the city: the mayor is returning officer. The boundaries of the city were defined by the act above mentioned, passed in the year 1842, for re-annexing Coventry to the county of Warwick, and abolishing the distinction of "county of the city," conferred by Henry VI. The corporation formerly held quarterly courts of session, at which the recorder presided, and they had power to try capital offenders; but the courts of quarter-sessions are now held here by the magistrates of the county, and the assizes by the judges of the Midland circuit, for the "Coventry division," which comprises the greater part of North Warwickshire. The city magistrates attend at the police-office every day except Tuesday. The County Hall is a neat modern building faced with stone, and ornamented with pillars of the Tuscan order, rising from a rustic basement, and supporting a handsome cornice in the centre of the front. Adjoining is the gaoler's house, a neat brick edifice; and behind it are the prison and bridewell, which were rebuilt a few years since, at an expense of £16,000. St. Mary's Hall, appropriated to the larger meetings and civic entertainments of the corporation, is a beautiful and magnificent structure, in the later English style, originally built by the master and wardens of the Trinity Guild, in the fourteenth century, and subsequently enlarged and beautified for the use of the corporation. The exterior, with its richly decorated windows, and elaborately groined archway, has an imposing grandeur of effect; the interior, which is replete with the richest ornaments of the decorated style, comprises a splendid banquet-hall, adorned with well-painted portraits of several of the sovereigns who have been entertained within its walls; the windows, of which the tracery is gracefully elegant, are ornamented with painted glass: at the upper end is a fine piece of tapestry, elegantly worked in compartments; and on the north side is a small recess, with a beautiful oriel window, of which the original carved roof is still entire: the council-chamber is fitted up in the ancient style, and retains, among its ornaments, many relics of feudal grandeur. The Drapers' Hall, nearly adjoining, is an elegant structure, containing a fine suite of rooms, designed and executed under the superintendence of Messrs. Rickman and Hutchinson, of Birmingham, and opened in 1832.

Coventry, until recently, formed a diocese jointly with Lichfield, of which the seat was fixed in this city from 1102 till 1188, when it was removed to Lichfield: the diocese comprehended the whole counties of Derby and Stafford (excepting the parishes of Broom and Clent in the latter), the greater part of Warwickshire, and nearly half of the county of Salop, and comprised 557 parishes. By the act of the 6th and 7th of William IV., cap. 77, it was separated from Lichfield, and, with the rest of the county of Warwick, united to the diocese of Worcester. Of the Cathedral, once a sumptuous and magnificent structure, formerly the Benedictine monastery founded by Leofric, of which, at the Dissolution, the revenue was £731. 19. 5., only the slightest vestiges are discernible, in the base of one of the towers, upon which a dwelling-house has been erected, and some indistinct remains of what are supposed to have been the conventual buildings. The city comprises the PARISHES of St. Michael, the Holy Trinity, and St. John the Baptist, the last having been constituted a parish by act of parliament in 1734. The parish of St. Michael contains about 2700 acres. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £26. 15. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £472: the impropriation belongs to the Corporation. The church is a splendid structure, principally in the later English style, with a lofty tower of four stages, pannelled and ornamented with niches in which were sculptured figures, and surmounted by a lofty and finely-proportioned octagonal spire, the whole height being, from the base of the tower, 300 feet, exactly equal to the length of the church: this beautiful and richly-decorated steeple was begun in 1373, and finished in 1395. The interior of the church is finely arranged, and derives great beauty from the loftiness of its elevation, and the delicacy of the piers which support the roof; the clerestory windows of the nave form a noble range of large dimensions, and are ornamented with some fragments of ancient stained glass; the chancel, which is of earlier date, was formerly a chapel, erected in 1133, to which the nave and aisles were subsequently added; it deviates from a straight line, and forms an angle with the line of the nave, which sensibly offends the eye. Several chantries were anciently founded in this and the other churches by different persons, and endowed for the maintenance of one or more priests. An additional church, called Christ Church, in the decorated English style, with a tower and spire, was erected in 1832, at an expense of £9702, defrayed partly by subscription, and partly by a grant from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The parish of the Holy Trinity comprises 1771a. 2r. 16p. of land. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10, with a net income of £396; it is in the patronage of the Crown, and the impropriation belongs to the Corporation. The church, which is of earlier date than the more recent part of St. Michael's, is a venerable cruciform structure, in the later English style, with a well-proportioned tower rising from the intersection, and surmounted by a handsome octagonal spire: the proportions of the interior are more massive than those of St. Michael's; and though less elaborate in its details, this church preserves throughout a consistent unity of design: the oak roof is pannelled and decorated with gilded mouldings; the pulpit, which is of stone, has been recently restored, and is a beautiful specimen of enriched sculpture, in the later style. The first stone of another church dedicated to St. Peter, and to which a district has been assigned, was laid on the 7th Sept. 1840; the design is in the later English style, and the building contains 1354 sittings, 695 of which are free: net income of the incumbent, £150. The living of St. John's is a rectory not in charge, in the patronage of the Corporation, and is always annexed to the head-mastership of the free school, and includes also a lectureship for the second master; net income, £83. The church, formerly a chapel, erected in honour of our Saviour, upon ground given by Isabel, queen-mother of Edward III., is an interesting structure, quadrangular in the lower part and cruciform in the upper; from the centre rises a square embattled tower, with circular turrets at the angles, and supported on four finely-clustered piers and arches of singular beauty; the interior is characterised by a simple grandeur of style. To the south of the city was the monastery of the Grey friars, the brethren of which were famous for their skill in the representation of religious dramas: it was originally founded in 1234, and the church was built in 1358, for which Edward the Black Prince granted the friars permission to take stone from the quarries in his park at Cheylesmere. The monastery was destroyed at the Dissolution; and all that remained of the church was the very beautiful steeple, consisting of an octagonal tower, with a pierced parapet, from which rises a lofty and finely proportioned octagonal spire. To this a body has been recently annexed by subscription among the inhabitants, aided by a grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners; and the design being in harmony with the character of the steeple, the whole forms an interesting architectural feature in the town. The church was consecrated in 1832, and dedicated to our Blessed Saviour. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £179; patron, Vicar of St. Michael's. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyans, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics.

The Free Grammar school was founded in the reign of Henry VIII. by John Hales, Esq., who, at his death in the 15th of Elizabeth, endowed it with lands at that time of the value of 200 marks, but which now produce an annual income of £900; it is under the management of the trustees of the church charities, by whom the masters are appointed. There are three exhibitions of £10 each, and two of £3 each, per annum, to either of the Universities; two fellowships in St. John's College, Oxford; and one fellowship in Catherine Hall, Cambridge, belonging to this establishment. The school-room is the remaining part of a church that anciently belonged to the hospital of St. John, founded in the reign of Henry II., the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £83. 3. 8.: it is a spacious room, lighted with windows in the decorated style, with rich tracery, and fitted up with the ancient carved seats removed from the choir of the church belonging to the monastery of the White friars: the western end, taken down to widen the street, has been rebuilt in an appropriate style, and ornamented with two turrets. Sir William Dugdale, the celebrated antiquary, and Archbishop Secker, received the rudiments of their education at this school. The Bablake Blue-coat school, now in union with the National Society, occupies one side of the quadrangle of the Bablake hospital, and was founded, in 1566, by Mr. Thomas Wheatley, ironmonger, and mayor of the city, in consequence of an accidental acquisition of wealth, by the delivery of barrels of cochineal and ingots of silver in mistake for steel gads, which he sent his agent to purchase in Spain; the original endowment, increased by subsequent benefactions, produces £938 per annum. A school, conducted on the national plan, is endowed for 50 girls; the national central school, supported by subscription, is a large handsome building of brick, in the antique style; another school, situated in Cow-lane, has an endowment in land, given by Mr. W. Baker, and augmented by subsequent benefactions; and there are also a Lancasterian school, and several others. Bond's hospital was founded in 1506, by Mr. Thomas Bond, draper, who endowed it with lands for the maintenance of ten poor men and one woman: the number of pensioners, in consequence of the improvement of the income, has been increased to forty-six, fifteen of whom are resident. The building, occupying one side of the Bablake quadrangle, is an ancient edifice of timber frame-work, in the Elizabethan style; it has lately undergone great improvement, under the superintendence of Mr. Rickman, and the entire building is now restored to its original character. The Grey friars' hospital, so called from its proximity to the monastery of that order, was founded, in 1529, by Mr. William Ford, who endowed it for five aged men and one woman; but, from the increased amount of the income, there are at present 34 poor persons in the establishment. The buildings, which form a long and narrow quadrangular area, almost darkened by the projection of the upper stories, are in the style of domestic architecture prevailing in the reign of Elizabeth; the timber frame-work, richly carved, and decorated with cornices and canopies over the central windows and doorways, is as perfect as when first erected, and these beautiful almshouses are deservedly admired as the most entire and elegant specimen of the kind in the kingdom. The house of industry occupies the site, and includes the remains, of an ancient monastery of Carmelites, founded, in 1342, by Sir John Pulteney, lord mayor of London, the clear revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £7. 13. 8.: part of the arched cloisters, beautifully groined, also the refectory and dormitory, are still remaining, with the beautiful entrance gateway, richly groined and ornamented with three canopied niches in front; to these remains has been added a large and handsome brick building, well adapted to the purpose. The management of this establishment, which is also a comfortable asylum for the aged poor, is vested in a body of guardians, under a local act, which extends over the parishes of St. John the Baptist and St. Michael, and part of that of the Holy Trinity, the whole union containing a population of 27,070. The trustees of the church and general charities have at their disposal funds to the amount of £3000 per annum, for distribution among the poor: the principal charity, that of Sir Thomas White, has arisen chiefly from his donation of £1400 in the reign of Henry VIII., exclusively of considerable sums to be lent for nine years to apprentices of good character, on the expiration of their indentures; in this loan natives of Leicester, Northampton, Nottingham, and Warwick, participate. At Allesley, about a mile distant, is a petrifying spring, not much used. Walter of Coventry, a Benedictine monk and eminent early historian; William Macclesfield, created Cardinal by Pope Benedict XI.; John Bird, Bishop of Chester, who was deprived of his see in the reign of Mary; Humphrey Wanley, the antiquary; and Nehemiah Grew, the botanist, were natives of this city; and Dr. Philemon Holland, the translator of Camden's Britannia, resided here for the greater part of his life, and, dying in 1636, was buried in the church of the Holy Trinity. Coventry gives the title of Earl, created in 1697, to the family of that name.

COVERHAM (HOLY TRINITY); a parish, in the union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 12 miles (W.) from Bedale, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ (S. W.) from Middleham; containing 1254 inhabitants. This place was once distinguished for its abbey, which was founded at Swainby, in the parish of Pickhall, near the southern point of Richmondshire, prior to 1189, by Helewisia, daughter and heiress of Ranulph de Glanville, lord chief justice of England, and was removed hither in 1214 by the son of that lady, Ralph Fitz-Robert, Lord of Middleham. The institution was of considerable celebrity, and received various endowments from families of rank, possessing, among other lands, nearly the whole of the valley of Coverham; and at the Dissolution its revenue was returned at £207. 14. 8. The situation of the priory was highly appropriate for the purposes of the foundation, and from the spot is obtained a view of the outline of Whernside and Penhill, which is very majestic, but it does not appear that the buildings were ever magnificent; the remains, situated on the north side of the Cover, consist principally of some shattered arches of the nave, and carved stones, and the gateway, a very picturesque structure, is yet entire. The estate of Coverham Abbey passed from the family of Bainbridge, and went thence to the Atkinsons, originally of Newstead (1584), in the parish of East Witton, and who were connected with the Bainbridges by both having married into the family of Askwith, of Newstead: from the Atkinsons it passed to the Listers, the present possessors. Out of the ruins of the abbey a great part of the materials was obtained for erecting the elegant mansion of Thos. Lister, Esq., near the entrance to whose garden are two full-sized statues in hauberks, which were placed in their present position in 1812, and probably represent the early patrons of the establishment.

The parish extends over a space of forty superficial miles, and is divided into the High dale and Low dale; the former containing 12,480 acres, and including the townships of Gammersgill, Swineside, Arkleside, Blackrake, Bradley, Coverhead, Pickle, and Woodale, and the village of Horsehouse, which gives name to a chapelry that consists of the preceding townships; and the latter comprising 9640 acres, and including, besides Caldbridge, East Scafton, Carlton, Melmerby, and West Scafton, the hamlet of Coverham Abbey, in the vicinity of which stand the ancient church and mill of the monks, and which, with Agglethorpe Hall and its dependencies, forms the township of Coverham, with 1090 acres of rich land. The river Cover, which confers its name upon the district, is a rapid stream, abounding with trout, and the dale through which it runs is supposed to have been the birthplace of Dr. Myles Coverdale, Bishop of Exeter, born in Yorkshire in 1488, and who, in 1535, published the first edition of the Bible ever printed in English. Both coal and lead are found in the parish. Coverham feast is on the 8th and 9th of November, and extends through the whole of the dale. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with the tithes of Arkleside, Blackrake, Coverhead, Pickle, Swineside, and Woodale, and in the patronage of the Tomlinson family, and incumbency of the Rev. G. C. Tomlinson, F.S.A., chaplain to Dr. Tomlinson, Bishop of Gibraltar; net income, £180. The church, which is thought to have been built in the 12th century, is a neat edifice, consisting of a nave, chancel, and south aisle, with a tower, and contains in the windows some remains of painted glass of great beauty: in the churchyard, which comprises less than a couple of acres, is a spot where neither the church can be seen nor the bells heard, which is occasioned by a very sudden descent on the south-east side, towards the bottom in which the abbey stands, while the noise of the stream propelling the mill-wheel, shuts out the sound of the bells. There are schools for the instruction of the children of the poor.

COVERHEAD, a hamlet, in the chapelry of HORSEHOUSE, parish of COVERHAM, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 4 miles (S. W.) from Horsehouse. This bleak and remote hamlet, also called Coverhill and Slope Gill, contains only one inhabited house, but is remarkable as having been the last acquired possession of the monks of Coverham, and was let by them at £3 per annum; it is now the property of Mr. Alcock, and the tithes belong to the incumbent of the parish. There were formerly several dwellings, including one known by the name of Hunter's Hall.

COVINGTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of THRAPSTON, hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Kimbolton, on the road to Higham-Ferrars; containing 142 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Higham-Ferrars to Kimbolton. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 1. 8.; net income, £165; patron, Earl Fitzwilliam. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1801.

COWARNE, LITTLE, a parish, in the union of BROMYARD, hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Bromyard; containing 187 inhabitants, and consisting of 674 acres. The living is annexed to the rectory of Ullingswick: the tithes have been commuted for £135, and the glebe consists of about 25 acres.

COWARNE, MUCH (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of BROMYARD, hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Bromyard; containing 557 inhabitants. A small stream, a branch of the river Froome, flows from north to south through this parish, which comprises by measurement 3550 acres; the soil is clayey, and the surface flat, in the midst of which is a spot of rising ground, called Greatfield, abounding in gravel, sand, and stones, all set in regular layers, which formation is supposed to be of diluvial origin. The road between Hereford and Bromyard intersects the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14. 19. 7.; net income, £280; patron, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. The site of the glebe-house and the ground attached consist of 2a. 3r. The church, having been almost totally destroyed in January, 1840, through the steeple being struck by lightning, has been rebuilt: in the chancel, which is the only part of the church saved from the conflagration, is the figure of a knight-errant, and a monument, containing a recumbent effigy of a lady of the name of Reede, with four small figures kneeling by her side, over which is a curious Latin inscription.

COWBIT (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of SPALDING, wapentake of ELLÖE, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Spalding; containing 664 inhabitants. The road from Spalding to Peterborough through Crowland passes through the village, and the navigable river Welland runs parallel with the road on the west. A small pleasure fair is held in June. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £460; patrons, certain Feoffees: the tithes were commuted for land, in 1800; the glebe consists of 350 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church was, with the cemetery, consecrated in 1486, by Bishop Russell, and was, previously to that year, a chantry to the abbey of Spalding, at which period it seems that Cowbit was made a separate parish. Major-General Dyson, owner of the estate of Peakill, in the parish, has lately erected two elegant tablets in the chancel, one in memory of his father, James Dyson, Esq., for many years solicitor to the Admiralty and Navy; and has also presented for the use of the church an excellent organ, and a beautiful window, which is over the altar-table. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. In 1712, Joseph Andrew endowed a school with £12. 10. per annum, arising from land, and he also left, with some others, lands producing about £33 per annum, for the poor.

COWDEN (ST. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of SEVEN-OAKS, hundred of SOMERDEN, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 9 miles (W.) from Tonbridge-Wells; containing 695 inhabitants. One of the four principal heads of the Medway, which rises at Gravelly Hill, in Sussex, directs its course eastward along the southern side of this parish, and separates it from the county of Sussex. Iron-ore is found. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 18. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift and incumbency of the Rev. T. Harvey: the tithes have been commuted for £544, and the glebe consists of 4 acres. The church is a small building, with a handsome spire; a north aisle has recently been added to it, and 134 additional sittings have been provided.

COWDON, or COLDEN, GREAT and LITTLE, a parish, in the union of SKIRLAUGH, partly in the Middle, but chiefly in the N., division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Hornsea; containing 151 inhabitants, of whom 19 are in Little Cowdon. Great Cowdon is stated in Domesday book as a berewick, belonging, in the Confessor's time, to St. John of Beverley; and the manor was in the possession of the Archbishop of York at an early period subsequent to the Conquest. At Little Cowdon was a parochial chapel dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, anciently given to the monks of St. Martin, Albemarle, who conveyed it in the 18th of Richard II. to the convent of Kirkstall; the patronage before this time had been exercised by the knightly family of Despencer. The parish is commonly considered a township, sometimes called Cowdons-Ambo, partly in the parish of Aldbrough, but chiefly in that of Mappleton: it comprises by measurement 1503 acres, of which about 800 are in Great Cowdon; one-fourth is pasture, and the remainder arable. The village of the latter place is situated at the very edge of the cliffs, on the German Ocean, and is occupied by a few farmers and persons employed in obtaining gravel from the cliffs. The chapel, with a portion of the village, suffered from the devastations of the sea, and was swept away about half a century since; the living, however, exists, and is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £2. 13. 4., and in the gift of the Crown; it is annexed to Aldbrough. Some time since the incumbent received £3000 in satisfaction of his claim to tithes.

COWES, EAST, a parochial district, in the parish of WHIPPINGHAM, liberty of EAST MEDINA, Isle of Wight and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (N.) from Newport; containing 880 inhabitants. The village is situated on the eastern side of the mouth of the river Medina, by which it is separated from West Cowes, and owes its origin to a fort or blockhouse, erected in the reign of Henry VIII., for the defence of the harbour, but of which no vestiges are now discernible. Until of late here was an establishment of the Customs, which has been removed to West Cowes, and the buildings are now occupied as a station for the men employed in the preventive service. Ship-building is carried on to a considerable extent; and good building-stone is obtained in several parts of the vicinity, particularly at Osborne Park, where it is raised in large quantities, and used in the erection of the Southampton docks. The neighbourhood abounds with interesting features and finely-varied scenery; and on the brow of a hill near the village is East Cowes Castle, a handsome structure, consisting of one square and two circular embattled towers, erected by the late eminent architect, Mr. Nash, for his own residence, and commanding a fine sea view. The church, dedicated to St. James, of which the first stone was laid by her present Majesty, when Princess Victoria, who was also present at its consecration, in 1831, was erected at an expense of £3000, raised by subscription, towards which Her Majesty and the Duchess of Kent contributed liberally, and which was also aided by a grant of £375 from the funds of the Incorporated Society; it is a handsome edifice, in the Norman style, and contains 668 sittings, of which 370 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the rector of Whippingham, with a net income of £120. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a national school is supported by subscription, and is in connexion with the Diocesan Board at Winchester. At Barton was formerly an oratory of Augustine monks, founded by John de Insula, in 1282, the beautiful remains of which have been converted into a farm-house.

COWES, WEST, a sea-port and chapelry, in the N. division of the parish of NORTHWOOD, liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight incorporation and division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (N.) from Newport, and 86 (S. W.) from London; containing 4107 inhabitants. This place owes its origin to the erection of a small castle on the western bank of the river Medina, commanding the entrance of the harbour; the fortress, which was built in 1539, by Henry VIII., is a small edifice with a semicircular battery mounting eight pieces of heavy ordnance, and contains accommodation for a captain and a company of artillery. From the excellence of the harbour, in which ships may find shelter in stormy weather, and from which they may sail out either to the east or west, as the wind may serve, Cowes has become a populous and flourishing town; and from its advantageous situation for ship-building, several private yards have been established, in which men of war have been built for the royal navy. The town is romantically situated on the acclivity of an eminence rising from the mouth of the river by which it is separated from East Cowes: the streets are narrow, and the houses in general inelegant, but, rising above each other from the margin of the river to the summit of the eminence on which they are built, they have a pleasing and picturesque appearance from the opposite bank, and are seen with peculiar advantage from the sea, of which they command interesting and extensive views. The excellence of its beach, the pleasantness of its situation, and the salubrity of the air, have rendered it a fashionable place for sea-bathing, for which purpose several respectable lodging-houses have been erected, and numerous bathing-machines are ranged on the beach, to the west of the castle. The parade, terminated at one extremity by the castle, and at the other by the Marine hotel, forms an interesting and favourite promenade. The Royal Yacht Club, consisting of about 160 noblemen and gentlemen, established here for many years, celebrate their regatta annually in August, on which occasion more than 200 yachts and other vessels are assembled, forming a spectacle truly splendid and magnificent. The club-house, situated on the parade, is a handsome building, with a spacious viranda in front, commanding a fine view of the sea, and having also in front an inclosure, within which are several pieces of cannon, and a semaphore, with apparatus for the display of signals to the vessels in the roadstead, belonging respectively to the several members of the squadron. An extensive trade is carried on in provisions and other articles for the supply of the shipping: the principal exports of the island are wheat, flour, malt, barley, wool, and salt, large quantities of which are shipped for France, Spain, Portugal, and the Mediterranean shores. Packets sail six times daily to Southampton, Ryde, and Portsmouth, and passage-boats to Newport. A market-house was erected in 1816, and the market is well supplied with meat, fish, and vegetables, and a fair is held on the Thursday in Whitsun-week. The town is partly in the jurisdiction of the borough of Newport, and partly in that of the county; the upper part of the market-house is appropriated as the town-hall.

The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £256; patron, Vicar of Carisbrooke. The chapel, erected in the year 1657, and consecrated in the year 1662, is on the summit of the hill on which the town is situated: in 1811 it was enlarged and improved at an expense of £3000, by the late George Ward, Esq., who added the tower at the west end, the lower part of which, opening into the church, forms the seat and the mausoleum of that family, and contains an elegant monument to the late Mrs. Ward; and it was further enlarged in 1832. A district church, erected on the west cliff, at the expense of Mrs. Goodwin, at a cost of £5000, including endowment, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was consecrated in 1832: it is a handsome building of white brick, ornamented with stone in the later English style, with an embattled tower crowned with pinnacles; the interior is lighted by a handsome range of lofty windows, enriched with tracery, and embellished with an east window of stained glass, and with other appropriate details; it contains 800 sittings, of which 350 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy in the patronage of Mrs. Goodwin; net income, £85. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans, and a handsome Roman Catholic chapel. A national school has been built, and a dispensary for the sick established.

COWFOLD, a parish, in the union of CUCKFIELD, hundred of WINDHAM and EWHURST, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX, 7 miles (S. S. E.) from Horsham; containing 943 inhabitants. The parish is on the road from London, by way of Horsham, to Brighton, and comprises by measurement nearly 3000 acres, of which the soil is chiefly a stiff clay, though in some parts of a lighter quality. The village is pleasantly situated, and a market for corn is held every alternate Wednesday. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, valued in the king's books at £10. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester: the tithes have been commuted for £580, and the glebe comprises 33 acres. The church is a handsome structure, in the early and later English styles, with a low square embattled tower; in the nave is a magnificent monument of brass to the memory of Thomas Nelond, prior of Lewes, who died in 1433. A national school is supported by subscription.

COWGROVE, or KINSON, a tything, in the parish of WIMBORNE-MINSTER, union of WIMBORNE and CRANBORNE, hundred of BADBURY, Wimborne division of DORSET, 2 miles (W.) from Wimborne; containing 752 inhabitants.

COWHONEYBOURNE, county of GLOUCESTER.—See HONEYBOURNE, COW.

COWICK, a chapelry, in the parish and union of ST. THOMAS THE APOSTLE, EXETER, hundred of WONFORD, Wonford and S. divisions of DEVON, 1 mile (S. W. by S.) from Exeter. The chapel is dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket. A Benedictine monastery, a cell to the abbey of Bec, in Normandy, was established here by William, son of Balwine, in the time of Henry II., but there are not any remains of it.

COWICK, a township, in the parish of SNAITH, union of GOOLE, Lower division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (S. E. by E.) from Snaith; containing 882 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 8970 acres, and includes East and West Cowick, and the hamlets of Newbridge and Greenland. Cowick and Snaith have a peculiar jurisdiction, which extends over several neighbouring places. Cowick Hall, a seat of Viscount Downe, is a large and handsome mansion, seated in an extensive park. At West Cowick is an Independent meeting-house; and a school on the national plan is partly supported by a yearly gift of £6. 6. from the township.

COWLAM, a parish, in the union of DRIFFIELD, wapentake of BUCKROSE, E. riding of YORK, 2 miles (N. E.) from Sledmere; containing 44 inhabitants. This place, which appears to have been formerly either a large village or town of some importance, is the property of the Rev. T. F. F. Bowes, to whose brother, General Bowes, killed at the head of his brigade in Spain, after being severely wounded at the storming of Badajos, a monument was voted by parliament, and erected in the Cathedral of St. Paul, London. The parish comprises by computation 2200 acres, of which about 300 are pasture, and 100 woodland; the surface is very irregular, and intersected with deep valleys of romantic character; the soil is chalky, with some portions containing flints, but generally producing good crops. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 11. 3.; net income, £30; patron and incumbent, Rev. T. F. F. Bowes. The church contains a curious ancient font.

COWLEY, a hamlet, in the parish of PRESTON-BISSET, union, hundred, and county of BUCKINGHAM; containing 31 inhabitants.

COWLEY, a hamlet, in the parish of DRONFIELD, union of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Dronfield. Here is a sulphureous spring.

COWLEY (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of CHELTENHAM, hundred of RASPGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Cheltenham; containing 317 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1846 acres, of which about 200 are pasture, 100 woodland, and the rest arable. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 1. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £300, and the glebe consists of 73 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. A school is partly supported by the clergyman and the proprietor of the estate.

COWLEY (ST. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of UXBRIDGE, hundred of ELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by E.) from Uxbridge, near the Great Western railway; containing 392 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11, and in the gift of I. Hilliard, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £197, and the glebe consists of 12 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. Barnard Dog-nall, in 1761, bequeathed four acres of land, producing £10 per annum, for the parish clerk, on condition of his keeping the church clean, and the churchyard in good order. A school is endowed with £5 per annum.

COWLEY (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of HEADINGTON, hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Oxford; containing 606 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £64; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. There is a school in union with the National Society. Part of the parish is called Temple Cowley, from some lands having been given by Matilda, in the reign of Stephen, to the Knights Templars, who had a preceptory here, which was afterwards removed to Sandford. To the north of Cowley Marsh are some remains of an ancient hospital, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, thought by Tanner to have been founded by Henry I., when he built his palace at Beaumont: being of royal foundation, it was granted by Edward III. to Oriel College, as a retreat for the students in time of pestilence.

COWLEY, a township, in the parish of GNOSALL, union of NEWPORT, W. division of the hundred of CUTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 5 miles (E.) from Newport.

COWLING, county of SUFFOLK.—See COOLING.

COWLING, with BURREL, a township, in the parish of BEDALE, union of LEYBOURN, wapentake of HANG-EAST, N. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Bedale; containing 138 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 463 acres of land. Cowling Hall is the property of Sir John Croft, Bart.

COWLING, a township, in the parish of KILDWICK, union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 7 miles (S. S. W.) from Skipton; containing 2458 inhabitants. This township, which is situated on the confines of Lancashire, and on the road from Keighley to Colne, comprises by computation 5140 acres, chiefly high moorland, affording tolerable pasturage: good building-stone is quarried, a portion of which was used for the construction of the Liverpool docks. Carr Head is the noble mansion of W. B. Wainman, Esq., commanding extensive views of the surrounding country. A church is about to be erected, from designs by Chantrell towards which the Ripon Diocesan Society have granted £200. There are places of worship for Baptists, Primitive Methodists, Wesleyans, and Independents; and a national school is supported by subscription.

COWPEN or COOPEN, a township, in the chapelry of HORTON, union of TYNEMOUTH, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8 miles (E. S. E.) from Morpeth; containing 2464 inhabitants. This place, which is called in old records Cupum, Cupin, Copun, or Couperum, comprises about 1553 acres, and extends nearly two miles along the southern bank of the Blyth, which is navigable here. The canons of Brinkburn and the monks of Tynemouth had salt-mines in the township, the latter being also owners of much of the land, and there were formerly several other salt-works near the river, but they have all long since disappeared. A colliery upon a large scale is worked by Messrs. Carr and Jobling, who have taken the royalty of the coal in nearly the whole township, with some of the adjoining royalties; it is of a good description for steam-engines, and is sold under the name of "Sidney's Hartley," the latter word implying a furnace coal, in contradistinction to "Wallsend," used for household purposes. The coal is shipped by means of a railway at the port of Blyth, principally for the French trade and for the London market; and another railway is in contemplation to communicate with the Tyne. That portion of the Bedlington iron-works in which engines are constructed, is in this township, adjoining the south-side of the river, where numerous hands are employed: there are also four corn-mills, two of which are worked by steam; and at Cowpen quay is a large ship-building yard. The village lies about a mile west of the port of Blyth, on the highway between that place and Newcastle, and about a quarter of a mile from the Blyth river; it contains several good houses, all of modern date except the Hall, at present in the occupation of a farmer; about 120 years ago it was nearly destroyed by fire, but has been partially rebuilt. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £295, payable in moieties to the Duke of Northumberland and M. J. F. Sidney, Esq., and the vicarial for £36, payable to the vicar of Woodhorn. There are places of worship for Burghers, Methodists of the New Connexion, Primitive Methodists, and Roman Catholics, of whom the last have a neat chapel, with a residence for the officiating clergyman, erected a few years since at the expense of Mr. Sidney. A Sunday school, in connexion with the Established Church, has been established by the incumbent of the parish, the Rev. R. Kennicott.

COWPEN-BEWLEY, a township, in the parish of BILLINGHAM, union of STOCKTON-UPON-TEES, N. E. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 4½ miles (N. E. by N.) from Stockton; containing 196 inhabitants. It lies to the north-east of Billingham towards the marshes, and comprises by computation 2590 acres, including the large farm of Salt-holme: the lands are the property of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. In Cowpen-marsh, a pasture of from 400 to 500 acres, are several large earthen mounds, now covered with herbage, the remains of the old salt-works that were carried on in this angle of the county, all along the Tees-marsh: the abbot of Guisborough had his salt-works on the opposite coast. The tithes have been commuted for £173. 3., of which £143. 3. are payable to the Dean of Durham, and £30 to the vicar of the parish.

COWSBY, a parish, in the union of THIRSK, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, 6¼ miles (N. N. E.) from Thirsk; containing 108 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1167a. 1r. 30p., of which about 510 acres are arable, 429 meadow and pasture, and 134 moor; the surface is beautifully diversified with hill and dale, and richly clothed in many parts with wood. George Loyd, Esq., lord of the manor, and proprietor of the lands, has an excellent mansion here. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 11. 0½, and in the patronage of Mr. Loyd: the tithes have been commuted for £125, and the glebe comprises 19 acres. Here is an hospital for four parishioners, endowed with £10 per annum, and supposed to have been founded by Lord Crewe.

COWSHUISH, a tything, comprising the hamlet of Toulton, in the parish of KINGSTON, union of TAUNTON, hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, W. division of SOMERSET, 5½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Taunton.

COWTHORN, a township, in the parish of MIDDLETON, PICKERING lythe and union, N. riding of YORK, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Pickering; containing 20 inhabitants. The soil is light and sandy, and the substratum in some parts limestone; the scenery is bold, with fine and extensive views from the higher grounds. Good stone is quarried for building purposes. Thomas Mitchelson, Esq., is lord of the manor, and exclusive proprietor of the township. There are some Roman antiquities.

COWTHORP (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the Upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 3¾ miles (N. E. by N.) from Wetherby; containing 115 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Nidd, about a mile from the road between Boroughbridge and Wetherby. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 15. 10.; net income, £130; patron, R. F. Wilson, Esq. The church is an ancient structure, consisting of a nave and chancel, in the latter of which is a monumental brass, whereon are the effigies of a man and woman, bearing between them a model of a church, and supposed to be Brian Rowcliff, a baron of the exchequer, and his lady, the founders of the building. Near the manor-house stands a gigantic oak-tree, one of the largest in England; it measures 60 feet in girth, and, when entire, its branches are said to have overspread an acre of ground: twenty-four persons have sat down within its hollow trunk.

COWTON, EAST (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of NORTH-ALLERTON, wapentake of GILLING-EAST, N. riding of YORK, 7 miles (N. E. by E.) from Catterick, and 8 (N. W. by N.) from North-Allerton, which is the post-town; containing 454 inhabitants. It comprises 3144a. 3r., of which 1743 acres are arable, and the remainder meadow and pasture; the surface is low, but undulated, with many commanding prospects; the soil is clay, partially gravelly, with beds of sand. A station on the Great Northern railway has been established at the place. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 6. 10½; the patronage is attached conditionally to the Mastership of Kirkby-Ravensworth Hospital, or otherwise belongs to the Wardens and Hospitaliers. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £270, and the vicarial for £213. 6. 8.; the glebe consists of ½ an acre. The church is a small edifice. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists. A free school, founded by the Dakyn family, in 1556, has an annuity of about £24, arising from the estates bequeathed to the above-mentioned hospital; and in connexion with this school is another, for girls, which is supported partly by Lady Arabella Arden and other subscribers, and partly by payments from the children. Both schools are under the direction of the National Society.

COWTON, NORTH, a township, in the parish of GILLING, union of RICHMOND, wapentake of GILLING-EAST, N. riding of YORK, 6¼ miles (N. E.) from Catterick; containing 273 inhabitants. This place is on the road from Richmond to Stockton, and comprises by computation 1290 acres of fertile land. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £84, and the vicarial for £10. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a small school.

COWTON, SOUTH, a chapelry, in the parish of GILLING, union of NORTH-ALLERTON, wapentake of GILLING-EAST, N. riding of YORK, 5¼ miles (N. E. by E.) from Catterick; containing 425 inhabitants, of which 152 are in the township. On "Cuton Moor," situated between this place and East Cowton, was fought the famous battle of the Standard, in which the English defeated the Scots, with the loss of 10,000 men: the spot is still called Standard Hill. The place comprises 2118a. 2r. 18p. of rather poor but well-cultivated land, and is intersected by the road leading from Richmond to Darlington, near which is the hamlet; the Great North of England railway passes on the east at a distance of about two miles: there is a beautiful view from Astley hill of the Hambleton range, extending all the way to the sea. Pepper Hall, the seat of the Hon. Richard Pepper Arden, is a handsome mansion, to which are attached fine and extensive pleasure-grounds. The living is a perpetual curacy in the patronage of the Vicar of Gilling, with a net income of £39; impropriator, John Webb, Esq. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary.

COXFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of EAST RUDHAM, union of DOCKING, hundred of GALLOW, W. division of NORFOLK, 5¼ miles (W.) from Fakenham. William Chene founded a priory at Rudham, in the reign of Stephen, which was subsequently removed to this place. Among other grants, the prior obtained license, in the 11th of Henry III., to hold a fair on the festival of the Translation of St. Thomas the Martyr; and in the 3rd and 15th of Edward I. a free market on Monday, and a fair on the eve and day of St. Matthew the Apostle, were bestowed. The boundary wall of the priory inclosed about 30 acres; and an arch and some other portions are still standing. The annual revenue, in 1428, amounted to £222. 12. 8.; but at the Dissolution it was only estimated at £153. 7. 1.

COXHALL, with BUCKTON, a township, in the parish of BUCKNILL, union of KNIGHTON, hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, 3¾ miles (E. by N.) from Knighton; containing 116 inhabitants. It is situated on the borders of Shropshire, and contains 1236 acres of a moderately productive soil. Here are traces of an ancient circular camp.

COXHOE, a township, in the parish of KELLOE, S. division of EASINGTON ward, union and N. division of the county of DURHAM, 5½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Durham, on the road to Stockton-on-Tees; containing 3904 inhabitants. The soil of the township is generally a strong clay. The village has lately increased considerably in consequence of the enlarged working of its collieries, of which the following five are in operation, viz., the Clarence-Hetton, the West Hetton, the Crowtrees, the Bowburn, and Coxhoe: the coal is shipped at Stockton, to which port it is conveyed by the Clarence railway. There are two limestone quarries, and a good seam of clay, used in the manufacture of brown earthenware; and a small foundry employs some hands. A church is in progress of erection; and there are places of worship for Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists, to which Sunday schools are attached; another school is aided by an annual contribution of £5 from the vicar.

COXLEY, a tything, in the parish of ST. CUTHBERT, city and union of WELLS, hundred of WELLS-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 272 inhabitants.

COXLIDGE, a township, in the parish of GOSFORTH, union and W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 2 miles (N.) from Newcastle; containing 924 inhabitants. The township comprises 800a. 1r. 14p., of which 691 acres are arable, 106 meadow and pasture, and 2½ wood; the surface is rather level, but rising gradually from the south towards the north; the soil is a strong clay, and though much of it requires good draining to render it more productive, yet grows fair crops of wheat; and the views embrace in the distance the Simonside and Cheviot hills. From the openness of the country to the west and north, and the extent of town moor on the south, the air is very salubrious, and is considered the best in the neighbourhood of Newcastle. An excellent seam of coal has been in work here for fifty years past, and is now carried on by Matthew Bell, Esq., M. P., and Messrs. Brandling, the lessees, under the firm of "the Owners of Coxlodge Colliery:" there are two pits of the depth of 90 fathoms, in which about 360 persons are employed; the coal is of a good household quality, and is sold as "Riddell's Wallsend:" Thomas Riddell, Esq. is the proprietor of the royalty. There is a railway for conveying the coal to the river Tyne; and the great north road passes on the east of the township. The Newcastle races are run on the adjoining moor, which, with the Leazes, contains 1600 acres; and in 1800 the grand stand was erected on the verge of the estate. There is a windmill-pump in the township, for raising water to supply a reservoir on the town moor near Newcastle. Coxlodge House is the property of John Anderson, Esq.; Roseworth House, that of John Carr, Esq.; Coxlodge Cottage, the residence of Samuel Hedley, Esq.; and Stand House, of Christopher Fenwick, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for £188. 2. 8., of which £85. 9. 9. are payable to the Bishop of Carlisle, a similar sum to the Dean and Chapter, and £17. 3. 2. to the vicar of Newcastle. The great dyke that divides the coal-field runs through the township from east to west.

COXWELL, GREAT (St. GILES), a parish, in the union and hundred of FARRINGDON, county of BERKS,

2 miles (S. W.) from Great Farringdon; containing 351 inhabitants. This parish comprises by admeasurement 1426 acres; the surface has a gentle acclivity, and the soil varies greatly on the north and west sides of the hill; it is chiefly a strong clay, in some parts poor and boggy, and on the south and east a rich loam. Limestone of a soft nature, in which numerous fossils are imbedded, is plentiful; and on Badbury Hill is a yellowish sandstone, hard enough for sharpening scythes. The village is pleasantly situated on the southern acclivity of the hill. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 7. 11.; net income, £211; patron, Bishop of Salisbury; impropiator, Earl of Radnor. The Rev. John Pynsent, in 1705, bequeathed land producing about £20 per annum, for apprenticing children; and there is a curious bequest from the Earl of Radnor, in 1771, charging his lands with an annuity of £45, to be applied to the apprenticing of children of Coleshill and this parish, so often as the vicar of Coleshill should be absent from the parish more than 60 days in any one year, and should accept any other preferment with the cure of souls. There are the remains of a religious establishment in the parish, formerly built by the abbots of Beaulieu, to whom the manor was granted by King John, in 1205, now a farm-house: the barn is 148 feet long, and 40 feet wide, the roof supported on two ranges of timber pillars resting upon stone pedestals; the walls are 4 feet thick, and of excellent masonry. On Badbury Hill is an ancient circular encampment, supposed to be Danish.

COXWELL, LITTLE, a chapelry, in the parish, union, and hundred, of FARRINGDON, county of BERKS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.) from Great Farringdon; containing 315 inhabitants, and comprising 842*a.* 3*r.* 13*p.* The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1801. The remains of a camp, apparently in the form of a square, are visible here, the double ditch on the western side being nearly entire; and there are also, in an inclosed field of about fourteen acres, 273 pits, called Cole's Pits, excavated in the sand and varying in depth, supposed to have been the habitations or hiding-places of the ancient Britons.

COXWOLD (ST MICHAEL), a parish, partly in the union of EASINGWOLD, and partly in that of HELMSLEY, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK; containing 1076 inhabitants, of whom 325 are in the township of Coxwold, 6 miles (N.) from Easingwold. The parish comprises the townships of Angram-Grange, Birdforth, Byland cum Membris, Coxwold, Newbrough, Oulston, Thornton cum Baxby, Wildon-Grange, and Yearsley, which are described under their respective heads, and consists of 12,025*a.* 2*p.* of fertile land, whereof about 3005 acres are arable, 7919 grass land, and 1099 wood, water, common, &c.; of the above the township of Coxwold contains 1369*a.* 1*r.* 21*p.* The village is pleasantly situated on an eminence amidst beautiful scenery of hill and dale, and woodland, and about 6 miles to the east of the Great North of England railway: there is a large cattle and sheep fair on the 25th of August, and races are held on the Monday after Michaelmas-day. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £351; patrons and impropiators, Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church is a small ancient structure, with an octagonal tower, and is said to have been erected so early as 700; the chancel was rebuilt in 1777, by the Earl of Fauconberg: there is some stained glass in the windows, and within are many handsome monuments of the Belasyse family. A chapel of ease was built at the village of Yearsley, in 1839, at the cost of George Wombwell, Esq., of Newbrough Park, the lord of the manor. A free grammar school was founded, in 1603, by Sir John Harte, alderman of London, who endowed it with £36. 13. 4. per annum; and an hospital for ten poor men was founded, in 1696, by Thomas, Earl of Fauconberg, the endowment of which consists of a rent-charge of £59. There are also several other charities, consisting of a yearly rent-charge of £16 out of the manor of Sigston, left by the Earl of Fauconberg; £24, received annually as the rent of land in the parish of Hushwaite, bequeathed by one of the same family; £10 a year as the produce of 7 acres of land called Park Nook; and the interest of £25, secured on the tolls of the York and North-Allerton turnpike-roads. Sterne wrote his Tristram Shandy and some other works at Shandy Hall, in the village, where he resided about seven years.

CRAB-WALL, with BLACON, a township, in the parish of the HOLY TRINITY, CHESTER, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of WIRBALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Chester; containing 61 inhabitants. Crab-Wall Hall, a handsome castellated mansion, was recently built by Samuel Farmer, Esq.

CRACKENTHORPE, a township, in the parish of BONGATE, or ST. MICHAEL, APPLEBY, EAST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Appleby; containing 104 inhabitants. At a place called Chapel-hill are the ruins of a chapel, dedicated to St. Giles. On the road from this place to Kirkby-Thore, and to the southward of the ancient Roman road, are traces of a quadrilateral camp; and further on is a small outwork, named Maiden-hold.

CRACOE, a township, in the parish of BURNSALL, union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 6 miles (N.) from Skipton; containing 153 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1300 acres of pasture and moorland, divided among various proprietors, of whom the Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor: abundance of good limestone and freestone is obtained in the mountainous parts. The tithes have been commuted for £97. 2. 6., payable to the rector of both mediocities of Burnsall. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CRADLEY (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of BROMYARD, hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Great Malvern; containing 1504 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the borders of Worcestershire, which bounds it on the north, east, and south; it is intersected by the road from Worcester to Hereford, and comprises by measurement 5970 acres, of which 1008 are woodland, and about 70 hop-grounds. A small stream, running from south to north, divides the district into two nearly equal portions. At Ridgway Cross are quarries of sandstone, the material of which is excellent for buildings; and there are also quarries of limestone and of Ludlow rock. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18, and in the gift of the Bishop of Hereford: the tithes have been commuted for £1022, and the glebe comprises 110 acres, attached to which is an excellent glebe-house. The church is a plain edifice, with a low tower. There is a place of worship for Lady Huntingdon's Connexion. The free school for boys was founded in the reign of James I., and endowed with £24 per annum from a parish estate; and there is also a girls' school. Several interesting fossils are found among the strata, including asaphus caudatus, the orthoceratites and the encrinites.

CRADLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of HALES-OWEN, union of STOURBRIDGE, Lower division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, Stourbridge and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 1 mile (N. W. by N.) from Hales-Owen; containing 2686 inhabitants. This place is situated on the river Stour, by which it is separated on the north and north-west from the county of Stafford; and on the east it is bounded by a portion of Shropshire; it consists of 724 acres, and is intersected by the road between Stourbridge and Hales-Owen: the surface is hilly, and the vicinity abounds with diversified and highly picturesque scenery. The manufacture of nails, traces, gun-barrels, and various other articles in iron, is carried on to a considerable extent; and there are mines of coal in the township, but from the unfavourable inclination of the strata, none are worked. The Dudley canal passes at the distance of about two miles. There is a remarkable salt spring about a mile from the village, and an attempt was made to introduce the manufacture of salt, but without success; the water was subsequently analysed, and found to be strongly impregnated with sulphate of soda, magnesia, and other mineral substances; and warm and cold baths were erected on the spot, now called Cradley Spa, and, from the beauty of its situation, much frequented. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £116; patrons and improPRIATORS, certain Trustees. The chapel was erected about the year 1789, and is situated on the brow of a hill commanding an agreeable prospect. There are places of worship for Baptists, Wesleyans, and Unitarians; and a national school is supported. In a large wood, called Cradley Park, are vestiges of a moat, which formerly surrounded some ancient building.

CRADLEY, WEST, a township, in the parish of CRADLEY, union of BROMYARD, hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Ledbury. Here is an endowed school.

CRAFTON, a hamlet, in the parish of WING, union of LEIGHTON-BUZZARD, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM; containing 83 inhabitants.

CRAIKE, or CRAYKE (St. Cuthbert), a parish, in the union of EASINGWOLD, S. W. division of STOCKTON ward, county of DURHAM, though locally in the wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK (in which it is included for election purposes), 3 miles (E. by N.) from Easingwold; containing 579 inhabitants. Egfrid, King of Northumbria, in 685, gave this place, with land extending three miles round it, to St. Cuthbert: a monastery is mentioned by Simeon of Durham as existing here, at the time of the Danish invasion in 883, when the bones of St. Cuthbert were brought to Craike, villam vocabulo Crecam, for refuge. Etha, a hermit, lived here at an earlier period, and is noticed as a famous saint, by the same authority. The parish comprises by measurement 2756 acres, about three-fifths of which are arable, and the remainder pasture, with the exception of 10 acres of plantation. Above the village, on an eminence, stand the ruins of Craike Castle, probably built by Bishop Pudsey in Stephen's reign, now converted into a farmhouse: the estate, which was in the hands of the bishops of Lindisfarne first, and of Durham after the removal of the see, from the time of St. Cuthbert to the prelate of Bishop Van Mildert, was sold by the latter, by virtue of an act of parliament. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ripon: the tithes have been commuted for £678, and the glebe comprises 52 acres, to which there is a good residence. The church is a neat edifice of the fifteenth century, with a tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The ruined castle is a picturesque object to the country around, commanding a view, which is only bounded by the horizon of the plain of York, and extending to the wolds of the East riding, and the hills of Craven on either side.

CRAKEHALL, a township, in the parish and union of BEDALE, wapentake of HANG-EAST, N. riding of YORK, 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. W. by W.) from Bedale; containing, with Rands-Grange, 576 inhabitants. The village forms a spacious quadrangle, inclosing an extensive and pleasant green, ornamented with stately trees; on which stands a district church, built by subscription, in 1839, at the cost of £1000, of which sum £300 were contributed by the Church Building and Ripon Diocesan Societies: the district assigned includes Crakehall, Langthorne, and East Brompton. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans.

CRAKEHILL, with ELMER, a township, in the parish of TOPCLIFFE, union of THIRSK, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Boroughbridge; containing 93 inhabitants. In this township are about 300 acres of land: the river Swale passes on the west at a short distance from the hamlet.

CRAKEMARSH, a township, in the parish and union of UTTOXETER, S. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Uttoxeter.

CRAMBE (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of MALTON, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK; containing, with the townships of Barton-le-Willows, Crambe, and Whitwell-on-the-Hill, 610 inhabitants, of whom 191 are in the township of Crambe, 1 mile (S. E.) from Whitwell. The parish is bounded by the river Derwent on the east, and situated one mile from the York and Scarborough turnpike-road, and comprises 4000 acres, of which the portions of arable, and of meadow and woodland, are nearly equal; the soil is generally rich, the surface undulated, and the scenery very pleasing and picturesque. Stone is quarried for building purposes and burning into lime. The river is crossed by a stone bridge of three arches. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 1. 8.; net income, £180; patron and appropriator, Archbishop of York. The church is an ancient structure with a square tower, and containing a handsome font. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a parochial school, built by Colonel Cholmley, is partly supported by Mrs. Cholmley. There is a chalybeate spring, but of weak power.

CRAMLINGTON, a parochial chapelry, in the union of TYNEMOUTH, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (N. W.) from Earsdon; containing 2657 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 3357 acres, of which 2640 are arable, 600 pasture, and 110 woodland; the surface presents the appearance of a ridge, having a descent both to the north and south; the soil is strong, and for the most part wet, unless where drained, owing to a bed of blue clay, from 30 to 110 feet in depth, lying immediately beneath. The views are very extensive: to the south and west are seen the churches and buildings of Newcastle, and the valley of the Tyne; on the east the ports of Seaton Sluice and Blyth, and the sea; and to the north the Simonside hills; and on a clear day the Cheviots, distant 50 miles, may be distinguished, although imperfectly. Arcot House, the seat of G. S. Storey, Esq., and the mansion of Edward Potter, Esq., colliery viewer and managing partner at Cramlington colliery, are among the principal residences. The chapelry is intersected by the Newcastle and Bedlington road, and the great north road passes to the west, within one mile of the village, which is situated on a pleasant slope, and has gradually risen to its present improved state from the period of opening the adjacent coal-mines, the produce whereof is conveyed by a private railway to the river Tyne, near Howden Pans. From the Cramlington colliery, first opened in 1824, the original and well-known "West Hartley" coal is procured, which is unrivalled for the use of steam-engines, and is exported in large quantities to distant parts of Europe and Asia: from the West Cramlington, which was commenced in 1838, "Buddle's West Hartley" is obtained, of the same quality, and used for the same purposes as the original "West Hartley;" and both, which are in full operation, employ about 1200 hands. Excellent freestone, also, is in abundance. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £66, and in the gift of Sir M. W. Ridley, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £635, of which £266. 13. 4. are payable to the Bishop of Carlisle, a similar sum to the Dean and Chapter, and £102 to Sir M. W. Ridley, as impropiator. The chapel, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a long rectangular building, and was enlarged about 50 years since, at a cost of £400, almost entirely defrayed by Sir M. W. Ridley, G. S. Storey, Esq., and Mansfelt De Cardonnel Lawson, Esq., who, in 1835, sold his estate here to the present proprietor, Thomas Taylor, Esq.: it is about to be rebuilt. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans. In the black shale which usually forms the roof of each seam of coal in the mines, shells of the class unio are frequently met with, while palma, ferna, and equisetæ are not uncommon: the water from the mines holds in solution carbonate of iron.

CRANAGE, a township, in the parish of SANDBACH, union of CONGLETON, hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Middlewich; containing 512 inhabitants. In the reign of Henry VI. a bridge of stone was erected across the river Dane at this place, at the expense of Sir John Nedham, but a few years ago it gave place to the present structure, which is built of wood, from a design by Mr. Harrison, of Chester. Thomas Hall, Esq., erected two schoolrooms, one of which he endowed with £10, and the other with £4, per annum.

CRANBORNE (ST. BARTHOLOMEW), a market-town and parish, in the union of WIMBORNE and CRANBORNE, chiefly in the hundred of CRANBORNE, but partly in that of MONCKTON-UP-WIMBORNE, Wimborne division of DORSET, 30 miles (N. E. by E.) from Dorchester, and 92 (W. S. W.) from London; containing 2551 inhabitants, and comprising the tythings of Alderholt, Blagdon, Boveridge, Holwell, Monckton-up-Wimborne with Oakley, and Verwood. This place, which is of great antiquity, derives its name from the Saxon Gren, a crane, and Burn, a river, either from the tortuous windings of a stream, which, rising in the parish, falls into the Stour, or from the number of cranes that frequented its banks. In 980, Ailward de Meaw founded here a Benedictine monastery, dedicated to St. Bartholomew; but, in 1102, the abbot retired with his brethren to Tewkesbury, where Robert Fitz-Hamon had founded a magnificent abbey, to which the original establishment became a cell. The old manor-house, being embattled, was called the Castle, and was the occasional residence of the king, when he came to hunt in Cranborne Chace, an extensive tract reaching almost to Salisbury: the chace courts were regularly held in it, in which was a room, called the dungeon, for the confinement of offenders against the chace laws. The town is pleasantly situated at the north-eastern extremity of the county, in the centre of a fine open expanse of champaign land; the houses are in general neat and well-built, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. Ribbon-weaving formerly flourished here, but has declined, and the majority of the labouring class are employed in agriculture. The market is on Thursday; and fairs are held on Aug. 24th and Dec. 6th, for cheese and sheep. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, and is divided into the liberties of the tything, the priory, and the borough, for which a constable, tythingman, and bailiff, are appointed respectively. The parish is the largest in the county, and comprises 13,052*a. 3p.*, whereof 5006 acres are arable, 2094 pasture, 1347 woodlands, and 4604 common and heath; the soil is chiefly chalk, gravel, and clay, of which last a species found at Crendall is used for making earthenware. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, with the chapels of Verwood and Boveridge, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £151; patron and impropiator, Marquess of Salisbury. The church, formerly the conventual church of the priory, is an ancient structure, partly Norman, and partly in the early English style, with a large and handsome tower in the later style, and a highly enriched Norman arch at the northern entrance; the pulpit is of oak, richly carved, and supported on a pedestal of stone; there are some remains of stained glass in the large window of the south aisle, representing the Virgin Mary and the heads of some of the saints, and in the chancel are monuments to the Hooper and Stillingfleet families. The chapel of Verwood was erected in 1829, and that at Boveridge has been rebuilt. The first stone of a handsome chapel, connected with the Establishment, was laid in Sept. 1841, at Alderwood, in the parish: the building has been completed at the expense of the Marquess of Salisbury. There is a school in union with the National Society. An almshouse was founded and endowed, in 1661, by Thomas Hooper, Esq., for three single persons, which number is now increased to five. On Castle Hill, to the south of the town, is a circular fortification, consisting of two deep trenches and ramparts, and including an area of six acres, in which is a well; and in the environs are numerous barrows, of which some have been opened and found to contain urns with bones. The learned Bishop Stillingfleet was born here in 1635. Cranborne gives the title of Viscount to the Marquess of Salisbury.

CRANBROOKE (St. DUNSTAN), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of CRANBROOKE, Lower division of the lathe of SCRAY, W. division of KENT, 7 miles (E.) from Lamberhurst, and 48 (S. E. by E.) from London; containing 3996 inhabitants. This place, anciently Cranebroke, derives its name from its situation on a brook called the Crane. When the manufacture of woollen-cloth was introduced into England by Edward III., it was principally carried on in the Weald of Kent, and Cranbrooke, situated in the centre of that district, became, and continued to be for centuries, a very flourishing town, and the chief seat of the clothing trade, by the removal of which into the counties of Gloucester and Somerset, within the last sixty years, its trading importance has been almost annihilated. The town consists chiefly of one wide street, extending three-quarters of a mile in length, from which a smaller street branches off at right angles; it is indifferently paved, but contains some well-built houses, and is lighted with gas, and amply supplied with water. The trade is now principally in hops and corn, which is carried on to a considerable extent; and there is a small manufactory for making hop-bagging, sacking, &c. The market is on Wednesday, and there is also a cattle market on alternate Wednesdays. The market-house, a neat octagonal building, supported on double columns at the angles, and surmounted by a cupola, was erected by the late William Coleman, Esq., a great benefactor to the town. The fairs are on May 30th and Sept. 29th, for horses and cattle, the latter being also the great hop fair.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £19. 19. 4½.; patron, the Archbishop; appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. The great tithes have been commuted for £994, and the vicarial for £64. 16. 5.; the appropriate glebe consists of 52 acres, and there is one acre of vicarial glebe, with a house. The church is a spacious handsome structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower: in the year 1725, one of the columns giving way, a part of the church fell down; it was repaired at an expense of £2000. A church has been erected in the hamlet of Milkhouse-street, by subscription, aided by a grant from the commissioners, and endowed with more than £1000; it was consecrated in Sept. 1838, and the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Trustees. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, Huntingtonians, Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians. The free grammar school was founded, in 1574, by Simon Lynch, Esq., and endowed by Queen Elizabeth with land, producing at present about £140 per annum, which has been augmented by benefactions to £300 per annum. A writing school was founded, in 1573, by Alexander Dence, who endowed it with a house for the master, a schoolroom, and the interest of £160. There is a national school, towards the erection of which the Society granted £130; and an infants' school, in connexion with the church in Milkhouse-street, has been erected by subscription, on a site granted by the Earl Cornwallis. The poor law union of Cranbrooke comprises 6 parishes, and contains a population of 13,163. In Milkhouse-street are the remains of an ancient chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity. There are several mineral springs in the vicinity, the properties of which are similar to those of Tonbridge-Wells. Sir Richard Baker, author of the English Chronicles, was born in the parish, about the year 1568, at Sissinghurst Castle, which was used as a receptacle for French prisoners during the late war; and William Huntington, founder of the sect called Huntingtonians, and who died in 1813, was born at a place in the parish named "The Four Wents."

CRANFIELD (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of AMPHILL, hundred of REDBORNESTOKE, county of BEDFORD, 7 miles (W. N. W.) from Amptill; containing 1371 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 3933 acres, of which the soil is generally light, and in parts clayey: some persons are employed in the lace manufacture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £33. 2. 1.; net income, £376; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. Beard. The tithes were commuted for 692 acres of land, under an inclosure act, in 1837. The church is a handsome structure, in the early and decorated English styles. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; and a school, endowed with £20, arising from land, is conducted on the national system. A chalybeate spring rises in the parish. Cranfield gives the inferior title of Baron to the Duke of Dorset.

CRANFORD (St. DUNSTAN), a parish, in the union of STAINES, hundred of ELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, 2½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Hounslow; containing 370 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Colne, over which is a bridge at the village, which from that circumstance takes the name of Cranford-Bridge; it comprises by measurement 721 acres, whereof about 323 are arable. The Great Western railway passes about three-quarters of a mile to the north of the church. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of the Countess of Berkeley: the tithes have been commuted for £250, and the glebe comprises 13 acres. The church was built previously to the time of Henry VIII., and contains portions of different styles.

CRANFORD (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of KETTERING, hundred of HUXLOE, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4½ miles (E. by S.) from Kettering; containing 257 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south by Cranford-St. John, and consists of 1089 acres. Lace-making is carried on by females. Good limestone abounds. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 9. 7.; net income, £150; patron and incumbent, the Rev. Sir G. Robinson, Bart. This benefice was consolidated with that of the adjoining parish of Cranford-St. John, by an order in council, of the 21st of Aug. 1841: the tithes have been commuted for land, under an inclosure act, and the glebe contains about 100 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church has been lately repaired and beautified at the expense of the rector.

CRANFORD (St. JOHN), a parish, in the union of KETTERING, hundred of HUXLOE, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Kettering; containing 341 inhabitants. This parish is intersected by the road from Kettering to Thrapston, and the navigable river Nene runs within two miles of its eastern boundary: it comprises 1149 acres. Good limestone is abundant. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12; net income, £198. The church has been lately thoroughly repaired and beautified at the expense of the rector.

CRANHAM (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ROMFORD, hundred of CHAFFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Romford; containing 280 inhabitants. This parish, which was formerly known by the names of Bishop's-Ockendon and Cravenham, comprises 1875*a.* 22*p.*, whereof upwards of 1000 acres are arable, 647 meadow and pasture, and 91 woodland; the surface rises towards the north: the soil is stiff and clayey in some parts, and in others of lighter quality. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 13. 4., and in the patronage of St. John's College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £560; and the glebe comprises 36 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is an ancient edifice, containing some old monuments. There is a small school in union with the National Society.

CRANHAM (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of STROUD, hundred of RASPGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Painswick; containing 428 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1823 acres. A few persons are employed in the manufacture of earthenware; and there are quarries of stone of good quality for building, and also for paving. The road from Cheltenham to Bath passes by the north-west, and that from Cheltenham to Stroud on the south, of the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with that of Brimpsfield, and valued in the king's books at £6. 6. 8.: the tithes of Cranham have been commuted for £162. The church is a neat ancient structure. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and a parochial school is supported by subscription.

CRANLEY (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of HAMBLEDON, Second division of the hundred of BLACKHEATH, W. division of SURREY, 8 miles (S. W.) from Guildford, on the road to Brighton; containing 1357 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 8000 acres, of which 4500 are arable, upwards of 500 meadow and pasture, and 3000 in about equal portions of woodland and waste: the village extends for more than a mile over the common. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 18. 1½.; net income, £1195; patron, F. Sapte, Esq. The church is a large and handsome edifice, in the ancient English style, having a richly ornamented chapel, inclosed with curious and elegant lattice work, at the termination of each aisle. There is a parochial school. At Vatchery are foundations, encompassed by a moat, of the ancient baronial residence of the lords of Shire; and near it is a large reservoir of water, comprising about 70 acres, for supplying the Wey and Arun Junction canal, which passes through the parish. Cranley gives the title of Viscount to the Earl of Onslow.

CRANMORE, EAST (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of SHEPTON-MALLET, hundred of FROME, E. division of SOMERSET, 4¼ miles (E.) from Shepton-Mallet; containing 66 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Doultling; impropiator, J. M. Paget, Esq.: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £71. 4. 6. The district which now comprises East and West Cranmore, was exempted from all suit and service to the hundred courts, and raised into a liberty by Henry I. The inhabitants bury at West Cranmore.

CRANMORE, WEST (ST. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of SHEPTON-MALLET, hundred of WELLS-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET, 3½ miles (E.) from Shepton-Mallet; containing 319 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Wells to Frome, and comprises 1867*a.* 11*p.*: there are quarries of good freestone. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Doultling; impropiator, R. C. Strode, Esq. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £145, and the glebe comprises nearly 53 acres: a rent-charge of £1. 5. is paid to the impropiator. The church is a handsome structure, in the later English style. A national school is supported by subscription.

CRANOE (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of MARKET-HARBOROUGH, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from Harborough; containing 137 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 16. 8.; net income, £181; patron, Earl of Cardigan. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1825.

CRANSFORD (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union and hundred of PLOMESGATE, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Framlingham; containing 303 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 1000 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; and in the patronage of Mrs. Chevallier: the tithes have been commuted for £330, and the glebe consists of 44 acres. There is a school in union with the National Society.

CRANSLEY (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of KETTERING, hundred of ORLINGBURY, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Kettering; containing, with the hamlet of Little Cransley, 319 inhabitants, and consisting of 2046*a.* 1*r.* 24*p.* The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 5.; net income, £78; patron and impropiator, J. C. Rose, Esq. The glebe contains about 40 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a handsome structure, beautifully situated in the midst of rich woodland scenery; the tower has crocketed pinnacles, and is surmounted with a spire; the interior contains monuments and tablets to the Rose family, and also to the family of Sir J. Robinson, lords of the manor. A school was founded, in 1824, by the Rev. G. Anderson, vicar, who erected an appropriate building, and endowed it with a rent-charge of £25.

CRANTOCK (ST. CADOCK), a parish, in the union of ST. COLUMB MAJOR, hundred of PYDER, W. division of CORNWALL, 1 mile (S. W.) from New Quay; containing 450 inhabitants. This parish comprises by measurement 2465 acres, and is bounded on the north by the Bristol Channel: it has a small harbour at the mouth of the river Gannel, which runs through the parish, where a number of vessels discharge their cargoes of coal; and sand, coal, slates, and various articles of merchandize are carried in barges about three miles up the river. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £78; patron and impropiator, Sir J. B. Y. Buller, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £380, and the glebe consists of 33 acres. The church is very ancient, and has a chancel unusually large in proportion to the nave; the arches and the principal parts of the tower are built of sandstone; the font bears the date of 1474. In the time of Edward the Confessor, the place was made collegiate for secular canons, who continued till the Dissolution, when the revenue of £89. 15. 8. was divided amongst the dean, nine prebendaries, and four vicars-choral. There is a stone coffin in the churchyard, which covers an area of three acres: whenever the ground in the vicinity is dug up for foundations, or any excavation made, an immense number of human skeletons are found. There are two places of worship for Wesleyans.

CRANWELL (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, hundred of FLAXWELL, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. W.) from Sleaford; containing 230 inhabitants. This parish is situated about half a mile west of the great north road, and comprises by computation 2506*a.* 3*r.* 30*p.*, nearly all arable. The wide extent of flat ground to the west and north, formerly covered with heath, and the open level of rich land to the east, before sprinkled with fen, are now well cultivated. The surface in some parts towards the south is undulated, and the soil in general throughout the parish a stiff clay, surrounded by heathy land. There are several quarries of stone of the oolite formation, with which most of the houses in the neighbourhood are built. The living is a discharged vicarage; net income, £199; patron, Bishop of Lincoln; improPRIATOR, Sir J. E. Thorold, Bart. The glebe, which is chiefly in the parish of North Ranceby, contains about 230 acres. The church is a small structure, with heavy Norman pillars and arches.

CRANWICH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of THETFORD, hundred of GRIMSHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, 6 miles (N.) from Brandon; containing 108 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1800 acres, of which 1000 are arable, 400 meadow and pasture, 100 woodland, and 200 heath. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Methwold annexed, valued in the king's books at £8. 9. 7.; net income, £450; patron, Lord Berners. The tithes have been commuted for £180, and there is a glebe-house, with 19½ acres of land. The original church was a very ancient structure, supposed to have been erected by Harold, one of whose freemen held a moiety of this place in the time of Edward the Confessor; the present structure is chiefly in the early English style, with a circular tower, and contains, in the chancel, a piscina, and some monuments to the Partridge family. A small school is supported.

CRANWORTH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of MITFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of MITFORD, W. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Shipdham; containing 340 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the south by a tributary to the river Yare, and comprises 1127 acres, of which 809 are arable, 279 pasture, and 5 woodland. The living is a rectory, with that of Letton consolidated, valued in the king's books at £5. 18. 6½., and in the gift of T. T. Gurdon, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £214. 8., and the glebe comprises 28 acres, with a handsome rectory-house. The church is in the early and later English styles, with a square tower surmounted by a neat spire; there are several monuments to the Gurdon family. A school is supported by subscription. About 11 acres of land are let to the poor by the rector, in small allotments.

CRASSWALL, a chapelry, in the parish of CLODOCK, union of DORE, hundred of EWYASLACY, county of HEREFORD, 5 miles (S. E.) from Hay; containing 374 inhabitants. This place comprises by measurement 5116 acres, of which 4007 are inclosed land, consisting of arable and pasturage, with a small portion of wood, and the remaining parts are mountain and common, affording pasturage for sheep and cattle: it is situated on the borders of Brecknockshire, among the Black mountains, and near the source of the Munnow river. There is a quarry of fine stone in the neighbourhood. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £47; patron, Vicar of Clodock. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. About the close of the reign of King John, a monastery was founded here, probably by Walton de Lacy, for a prior and ten religious of the order of Grandmont, in Normandy: at the seizure of alien priories it was valued at 40*s.* per annum, and granted, in the 2nd of Edward IV., to God's House, now Christ's College, Cambridge.

CRASTER, a township, in the parish of EMBLETON, union of ALNWICK, S. division of BAMBROUGH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6¼ miles (N. E.) from Alnwick; containing 247 inhabitants. In 1272 the manor was held by William de Craucestr', by the service of half a knight's fee, and it has continued in his family to the present time; his descendants in the 14th century altered their name to Craster. Craster Tower, the seat of Thomas Wood Craster, Esq., is surrounded with plantations, and commands fine land and sea views. The village, which is called Craster Sea-Houses, is situated on the coast of the North Sea.

CRATFIELD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, 7 miles (W. S. W.) from Halesworth; containing 720 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 1735 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Laxfield annexed, valued in the king's books at £5. 7. 11., and in the gift of the Rev. E. Holland: the impropriate tithes, belonging to the Hudson family, have been commuted for £403, and the vicarial for £115; there is a glebe-house, with about 6 acres of land. The church, which is chiefly in the later English style, consists of nave, chancel, and side aisles, with an embattled tower; the font has some curious sculptures, representing Scriptural subjects. There is a place of worship for Independents. A national school was endowed with £9. 6. 8. per annum, under the will of Mrs. Mary Leman, dated 1805; and there are town lands, which let for about £200 per annum, applied to the repairs of the church, and to general purposes.

CRATHORNE (All Saints), a parish, in the union of STOKESLEY, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (S. S. E.) from Yarm; containing 304 inhabitants. This place, which is in the district called Cleveland, and situated on the western side of the vale of the river Leven, anciently belonged to the Crathorne family, who were settled here for many generations, and of whom Sir William Crathorne, Knt., died in the early part of the 14th century. The parish comprises about 2450 acres, of which 1722 are arable, and in good cultivation, 500 meadow and pasture, and 200 woodland and plantations: the surface is generally level; the scenery enriched with wood, and in many situations very pleasing; and the soil near the village, and on the banks of the Leven, which here abounds in trout, is a gravelly loam, but in most other parts a poor clay. Good white freestone, used for building purposes, is obtained from the bed of the river. The village, which is neatly built, is situated on the road to Thirsk: many of the inhabitants were formerly employed in the linen manufacture, which was carried on to a considerable extent, and there was also a spacious bleach-ground in the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 11. 10½, and in the patronage of Mrs. Tasburgh, with a net income of £205. The church is a small ancient structure, in the chancel of which is the recumbent effigy of a knight, supposed to be that of Sir William Crathorne. There is a Roman Catholic chapel, originally founded by the Crathorne family, and rebuilt about 1825. Thomas Baxter, in 1769, gave the interest of £74 for the education of children, and which now aids a parochial school supported by subscription. The Rev. Ralph Grenside, the rector, exclusively supports a Sunday school. Near the village is a chalybeate spring.

CRAWCROOK, a township, in the parish of RYTON, union of GATESHEAD, W. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 7 miles (W.) from Newcastle-on-Tyne; containing 290 inhabitants. This place was formerly, in part, the property of the Horsleys, of Horsley, in Northumberland, from whom it passed by marriage, in the 16th century, to the family of Carnaby, who sold it in small parcels to various persons: the remaining portion was once part of the possessions of the Hospital of St. Giles of Keyper, and on the Dissolution, was transferred to the Cockburnes, from whom it descended to the families of Heath, Watson, and others. The township is intersected by the railway from Newcastle to Carlisle, and bounded on the north by the river Tyne, from which the land gradually rises, commanding pleasing views, and being for the most part undulated; the soil is of good quality, producing turnips and excellent barley, for which latter the district is celebrated. A coal mine was opened in 1820, but is not in operation; and there are two water corn-mills. Crawlerook townfields, consisting of 700 acres, were divided by act of parliament in 1794. The tithes have been commuted for £236. The Wesleyans and Presbyterians have places of worship here; and there are schools for boys and girls, the master of which has £30, and the mistress £20, per annum, each with a house and garden, Mr. Simpson having left the interest of £1000 to the institution: a new school-house for the boys was erected in 1840.

CRAWFORD-TARRANT (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of BLANDFORD, hundred of BADBURY, Wimborne division of DORSET, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Blandford-Forum; containing, with Preston, 67 inhabitants, and comprising about 1000 acres. The living is a donative; net income, £50; patron and impropiator, J. S. W. S. E. Drax, Esq. Richard Poor, successively Bishop of Chichester, Salisbury, and Durham, founded, about 1230, an abbey of Cistercian nuns, in honour of the blessed Virgin and All Saints: at the Dissolution its revenue was estimated at £239. 11. 10.

CRAWLEY, a township, in the parish of EGLINGHAM, union of ALNWICK, N. division of COQUETDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9¼ miles (W. N. W.) from Alnwick; containing 20 inhabitants. It was anciently called Crawlawe, from Caer-law, a fortified hill. Crawley Tower, a Roman structure, stands on an eminence near an old and strong intrenchment, which is thought to be the Alauna Amnis of Richard of Cirencester, though some place this station at Alnwick, and others at Glanton: it commands a fine view of the vale of Whittingham, with the river Breamish, from its source to Horton Castle; and there are the remains of no less than seven British and Saxon fortifications within four miles round the spot. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £6. 10., and the vicarial for 6s. 6d.

CRAWLEY, a hamlet, in the parish and union of WITNEY, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 1¼ mile (N. W. by N.) from Witney; containing 252 inhabitants, of whom a few are employed in the manufacture of blankets. It comprises 1116 acres, of which 504 are arable, 75 pasture, 410 woodland, and the remainder waste. The tithes have been commuted for £205.

CRAWLEY (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of NEW WINCHESTER, hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (E.) from Stockbridge; containing, with the chapelry of Hunton, 483 inhabitants, of whom 372 are in that portion of the parish exclusively of the chapelry. It comprises about 3490 acres, of which 2803 are arable, 420 meadow and down, and 257 wood. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £35. 13. 4., and in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester: the tithes have been commuted for £657. 10., and the glebe comprises 10 acres. The church has been repaired at an expense of £270, towards which the Bishop of the diocese contributed £50, the rector £200, and the parishioners £20. There is a school on the national plan. A silver coin, of the reign of Elizabeth, was dug up in 1839.

CRAWLEY (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of EAST GRINSTEAD, hundred of BUTTINGHILL, rape of LEWES, E. division of SUSSEX, 9½ miles (N. by W.) from Cuckfield; containing 449 inhabitants. The parish comprises 769a. 2r., of which 185 acres are arable, 119 pasture, 129 plantations, and 318 waste. It is a post town, situated on the road from London to Brighton, and consists of one wide street, in which stands a remarkably fine old elm-tree of immense girth: the houses on the west side of the village are in the parish of Ifield. Fairs for horned-cattle are held on May 8th and September 29th. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 15., and in the gift of Col. Clitherow: the tithes have been commuted for £86. 14., and the glebe contains nearly 29 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is partly in the decorated and partly in the later English style; a gallery was erected in 1827. There is a parochial school near the village, erected in 1831, at a cost of £300.

CRAWLEY, HUSBORN, county of BEDFORD.— See HUSBORN-CRAWLEY.

CRAWLEY, NORTH (ST. FIRMIN), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3½ miles (E. by N.) from Newport-Pagnell; containing 865 inhabitants. The manor is the property of the Lowndes family, to whom it was conveyed about the year 1710, and the advowson afterwards in 1723. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £27. 10., and in the patronage of William Selby Lowndes, Esq.: the tithes were commuted for land in 1780. The church has been enlarged by the addition of 106 free sittings. A monastery, dedicated to St. Firmin, is mentioned in Domesday book as having been founded here before the time of Edward the Confessor, and was in existence after the Conquest.

CRAY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BROMLEY, hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 2 miles (S. by W.) from Foot's-Cray; containing 997 inhabitants. The district of the Crays, so called from the river Cray, which runs through it, is reckoned one of the most beautiful tracts in Kent, and produces a vast quantity of birch: it comprehends four parishes, distinguished by their prefixes, of which St. Mary's was the most considerable, and had the privilege of a market in the reign of Edward I.; but the market-house having been destroyed by a tempest in 1703, the market has not since been held. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Orpington: the church contains several ancient brasses and some memorials of the Mannings. A school was established in 1710; and Sir Thomas Dyke, in 1816, erected another, which is on the national system, and is endowed with a farm at Edenbridge, bequeathed, in 1715, by Catherine Withens.

CRAY, FOOT'S (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BROMLEY, hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, $12\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from London; containing 358 inhabitants. This place probably derived its name from Fot or Vot, its proprietor in the time of Edward the Confessor, and from the river Cray, which runs by the eastern end of the village, there turns an extensive paper-mill, and then directs its course towards North Cray. The parish comprises by measurement 798 acres, of which about 380 are arable, 300 meadow and pasture, and 66 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8.3.4., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £264, and the glebe comprises 2 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a small plain building, supposed to be of high antiquity. A national school was established in 1815, to which the Rev. Francis Wollaston left £200 five per cents.; and Benjamin Harence, Esq., in 1817, gave a portion of land whereon a school-house had been previously erected.

CRAY, NORTH (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of BROMLEY, hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 1 mile (N. by E.) from Foot's-Cray; containing 517 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from London to Maidstone, and comprises about 1444 acres; it is pleasingly diversified with villas and well cultivated domains, of which North Cray Place and Mount Mascall are the principal. In 1723, a subterraneous fire broke out, and the inhabitants for several days afterwards employed themselves with waggons in conveying water from Bexley, for the purpose of quenching the flames. A small fancy fair is held on the 29th May. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13.9.9½., and in the gift of Lord Bexley: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £392, and the glebe comprises 48 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church, a small building, is said to have been formerly the chapel of a monastery which stood on the site of the present North Cray Place. In 1776, Mrs. Hetherington bequeathed £100 for a school. The Rev. W. Hetherington gave five almshouses and a sum of money for repairs, on which the dividends now amount to £13.6.2. per annum; two of the houses are occupied by the schoolmaster and the parish clerk, and the others by industrious poor persons.

CRAY, ST. PAUL'S (St. PAULINUS), a parish, in the union of BROMLEY, hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 1 mile (S.) from Foot's-Cray; containing 564 inhabitants. This place is situated on the small stream of the Cray, which here turns a paper-mill, employing about 30 men and 40 women: the parish comprises about 1700 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12.13.4., and in the gift of Viscount Sydney: the tithes have been commuted for £486, and the glebe contains upwards of 12 acres, with a glebe-house. The church has some interesting specimens of architecture, and is supposed to have been built about the middle of the 13th century, and its vestry, part of the walls of which are of Roman brick, to have been anciently a chapel. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. In a wood near Paul's Cray Common is a strong chalybeate spring, formerly of some repute in the neighbourhood, but now almost entirely disused; its waters resemble those of Tonbridge-Wells. Lord Wynford resides at the seat called Leesons, in the parish, which is delightfully situated on the border of the common, commanding fine and extensive views over the country towards Essex.

CRAYFORD (St. PAULINUS), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union of DARTFORD, hundred of LESSNESS, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 13 miles (E. by S.) from London; containing, with the hamlets of Northend and Slade-Green, 2408 inhabitants. This place is so called from Creccanford, an ancient ford on the river Creccan, now Cray. In the immediate vicinity some antiquaries have placed the Roman station Noviomagus, near which a great battle was fought, in 457, between Hengist the Saxon and the British king Vortimer, which ended in the secure establishment of the kingdom of Kent under the rule of the former. The parish comprises by measurement 2458 acres; the surface is varied with hill and dale; the soil in general is gravel, resting in some parts on strata of loam, beneath which is chalk. The river Cray flows through the parish in two separate branches, and the meadows in its vicinity are occasionally subject to inundation: upon its banks are several extensive establishments for printing calico, silk, and chalis, and a very large flour-mill. The village consists of an irregularly formed street, branching off from the London and Dartford road. One of the archbishops of Canterbury, who formerly had possessions here, procured a weekly market on Tuesday, and a fair on our Lady's Nativity; the market has long been disused, but a fair is still held on the 8th of September. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £35.13.4., and in the gift of Thomas Austin, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £850, and the glebe comprises nearly 57 acres, to which there is a house. The church, which stands on an eminence at the upper end of the village, is a plain structure, adorned with an elegant altar-piece. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists; and a national school is endowed with the interest of £180 three per cents. In the parish are many ancient caves, of which some are from fifteen to twenty fathoms deep, increasing in circumference from the mouth downwards, and containing several large apartments, supported by pillars of chalk: it is conjectured that they were used as places of security for the families and moveable goods of the Saxons, during their wars with the Britons. The manor-house, which was built and occupied by Sir Cloudesley Shovel, is now tenanted by a farmer.

CREACOMBE (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of SOUTH MOLTON, hundred of WITHERIDGE, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from South Molton; containing 58 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 18. 9., and in the gift of the Rev. W. Karslake: the tithes have been commuted for £44. 11. 6., and the glebe consists of 100 acres.

CREAKE, NORTH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of BROTHERCROSS, W. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. E. by S.) from Burnham-Westgate; containing 648 inhabitants. It comprises 3601*a.* 1*r.* 17*p.*, of which 3179 acres are arable, 126 pasture and meadow, and 69 woodland: the road from Fakenham to Burnham runs through the village. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £33. 6. 8., and in the gift of Earl Spencer and the Bishop of Norwich, alternately: the tithes have been commuted for £1025, and the glebe consists of 187 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church, which is in the decorated and later English styles, consists of a nave, chancel, and north aisle, with a square embattled tower; on the south side of the chancel are three stone stalls, with a piscina of elegant workmanship, and opposite is an altar-tomb, under a decorated canopy; the font is very ancient, and on the floor of the nave is a fine brass memorial of a priest. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists; also a national school, endowed with £10 per annum, by the late Mr. Herod. At Lingerscroft, between Creake and Burnham, Sir Robert de Narford, in 1206, founded a church, and subsequently a chapel and hospital, dedicated, in 1221, to St. Bartholomew, in which he placed a master, four chaplains, and thirteen poor lay brethren: this foundation soon afterwards acquired the distinction of a priory of Augustine canons, and, in the 15th of Henry III., was elevated into an abbey: that monarch also confirmed the grant of a fair previously made, changing the period to the eve and festival of St. Thomas the Martyr; and in the 14th of Edward I., the abbot claimed the right of holding four fairs annually at Creake. In consequence of the death of the abbot, and there being no convent to elect another, the abbey was dissolved, and its possessions were granted, in the 22nd of Henry VII., to the Countess of Richmond, by whom they were given to Christ's College, Cambridge: remains of the choir and abbey still exist, and exhibit some very fine arches.

CREAKE, SOUTH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of BROTHERCROSS, W. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (S. S. E.) from Burnham-Westgate; containing 940 inhabitants. The place comprises 4090*a.* 30*p.*, of which nearly 3078 acres are arable, 273 pasture and meadow, 39 woodland, and 700 common, used as a sheep-walk: the Fakenham road runs through the village. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £22, and in the gift of the family of Townshend, the impropiators: the great tithes have been commuted for £675, and the vicarial for £440; the vicarial glebe contains 3 roods, to which there is a glebe-house. The church contains portions of the early, decorated, and later English styles, with a square tower. There is a place of worship for Independents. The sum of £100 per annum, derived from land, is partly applied to the relief of the poor, and partly in support of a national school, also aided by subscription. In the neighbourhood is a Saxon fortification, the way leading from which is called Blood-gate, from a dreadful slaughter made there in a battle between the Saxons and the Danes.

CREATON, GREAT (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of BRIKWORTH, hundred of GUILSBOROUGH, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Northampton; containing 505 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the road from Northampton to Welford, and comprises 938 acres; the soil is partly red sand, and partly loam, alternated with clay. Several of the population are employed in spinning, and in the making of lace. The village is built round a pleasant green, on the north side of a hill, at a short distance from the public road. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 1. 8., and in the gift of the Rev. E. T. Beynon: the tithes were commuted in 1782, for 148*a.* 3*r.* 37*p.* of land, now valued at £260 per annum. The church is situated on an eminence. There is a place of worship for Independents. In 1825, six cottages, for the accommodation of aged widows, were built on the green by the Rev. Thomas Jones, 40 years curate of the parish. There are some remains of Holmby House, where Charles I. suffered imprisonment.

CREATON, LITTLE, a hamlet, in the parish of SPRATON, union of BRIKWORTH, hundred of SPELHOE, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Northampton; containing 77 inhabitants, and comprising 333 acres. It is situated in the northern part of the parish, and close to the village of Great Creaton.

CREDENHILL (St. MARY), a parish, in the hundred of GRIMSWORTH, union and county of HEREFORD, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Hereford; containing 192 inhabitants. The road from Hereford to Kington runs through the parish, which comprises by measurement 1215 acres; about 517 are arable, 500 meadow and pasture, and 170 woodland. The scenery is picturesque and beautiful; the soil is a rich sandy loam, and the prevailing kinds of timber are elm and oak: there is a quarry of excellent stone on Crede Hill, not now in operation, but the material of which was formerly used for building castles and churches. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 19. 4., and in the gift and incumbency of the Rev. John Eckley, whose tithes have been commuted for £354; and who has a glebe of 27 acres, with a house. The church is a strong ancient structure, in the later English style. On the summit of a steep and lofty hill, the declivity of which is well wooded, are the remains of an almost inaccessible camp, having an outer and an inner trench, inclosing an area of about 50 acres, and supposed to have been constructed by the Romans, for the defence of their adjacent station at Kenchester, the Magna Castra of Antoninus: the view from it is one of the most extensive and beautiful in the county.

CREDITON (HOLY CROSS), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of CREDITON, and extending also into that of WEST BUDLEIGH, Crediton and N. divisions of DEVON; comprising the tythings of Cannon-Fec, Crediton, Knowle, Rudge, Town, Uford, Uton, and Woodland; and containing 5947 inhabitants, of whom 2245 are in the borough and tything of Crediton, 8 miles (N. W.) from Exeter, and 180 (W. by S.) from London. This place, which takes its name from its situation near the river Creedy, was for many years the seat of a diocese, of which a collegiate church, founded here in 905, and dedicated to the Holy Cross, became the cathedral. In the reign of Canute, Levinus, Bishop of Crediton, prevailed upon that monarch, with whom he had great influence, to annex the see of St. Germans to that of Crediton, the united see having been removed to Exeter by Edward the Confessor, in 1049. A chapter, consisting of a dean and twelve prebendaries, continued to be maintained in the old collegiate church, under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Exeter, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £332. 17. 5.: the church, with some lands belonging to it, was granted to twelve of the inhabitants, who were incorporated as governors thereof in the reign of Edward VI. In the reign of Edward I. this borough sent members to a parliament held at Carlisle; and, in 1310, Bishop Stapleton obtained for it a grant of a weekly market and three annual fairs. Towards the middle of the sixteenth century, the opponents of the Reformation assembled their troops at Crediton, but were compelled to withdraw by Sir Peter Carew, who was sent against them with a superior force. In 1644, Charles I. reviewed his soldiery at this town, which was subsequently held by the army under Sir Thomas Fairfax. In 1743, a fire destroyed a considerable part of it; a similar calamity occurred in 1769; and in 1840, a fire broke out in the eastern portion of the town, by which 22 houses were consumed.

CREDITON is pleasantly situated in a vale near the Creedy, which unites with the river Exe, between this place and Exeter: it is divided into two parts, east and west, of which the former, containing the church, is the more ancient, and the latter the more extensive; these have been connected by a line of road recently constructed, and the town now consists chiefly of one main street, nearly a mile in length, containing low cottages at each extremity, with a few well-built houses in the centre. A new market-place has been erected in North-street, by J. W. Buller, Esq., lord of the manor, and many improvements have been made within the last few years, under an act obtained in 1836. Assemblies and concerts take place occasionally, during the winter, in a good assembly-room, conveniently fitted up. The town has long been celebrated for the manufacture of serge, chiefly for exportation, but the business has much declined, and the principal trade is now in making coarse linen cloth, called brin. The market, which is well attended, is on Saturday; and on the Saturday preceding the last Wednesday in April is a large market for cattle, in which more than 1000 head are frequently sold. Fairs for cattle are held, in the eastern division of the town, on May 11th and Sept. 21st, and on St. Lawrence's Green, in the western division, on the 21st of Aug., if it happen on Tuesday or Wednesday, if not, it is postponed till the following Tuesday: this latter fair continues for three days. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty-session every month; and its local affairs are under the superintendence of a portreeve, bailiff, and constables, chosen annually by a jury at the court leet of the lord of the manor.

The parish is ten miles in length from east to west, and about four miles in extreme breadth, and comprises by recent measurement 12,000 acres. The soil in the northern and central portions is a rich red loam, well adapted for grain, with some excellent pasture, and in the southern portion of a clayey nature, coarse, and alternated with copse and brake; the surface is hilly, and richly wooded: the elm grows profusely in the hedge-rows, and the scenery, enlivened with the streams of the Creedy and Exe, is finely varied. At Posberry is a quarry of trap-stone, of excellent quality for building and road-making. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £30, with a net income of £425; and in the patronage of the twelve Governors, by whom the church is kept in repair, and to whom the impropriation belongs, and who also elect a chaplain to assist the vicar: the great tithes have been commuted for £1770. The church, rebuilt in the reign of Henry VII., is a spacious and magnificent cruciform structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower rising from the centre: the nave is separated from the aisles by massive columns, with ornamented capitals, supporting arches of the decorated English style, and is lighted by an elegant range of clerestory windows, with enriched and flowing tracery; the original roof of oak, richly carved and ornamented with transverse ribs and bosses at the intersection, is now concealed by a flat plain ceiling; on the south side of the choir are three stone sedilia, an ancient piscina of a highly interesting character is still remaining, and there are many ancient monuments, altar-tombs, and brasses. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians. The grammar school was founded and endowed by Edward VI., and further endowed by Queen Elizabeth, who by her charter vested the patronage in the twelve governors of the church, directing them to elect four boys, under the name of Queen Elizabeth's Grammar Scholars, to each of whom 40s. are annually given: there are three exhibitions, of £6. 13. 4. each, to either of the universities, tenable for five years, belonging to the school. The Blue-coat school, founded about the year 1730, by subscription, and since endowed with various benefactions, was united with an English school in 1814, and placed under one master, in a house erected, in 1806, by the trustees of Sir John Hayward's charity: the annual income of these united schools is £116. 12. A mathematical school was established, in 1794, by Mr. Samuel Dunn, who endowed it with £600 stock, now in the four per cents.; and there is also a school in union with the National Society. Almshouses with small endowments were founded by Mr. Humphrey Sparway, in 1557, and by Mr. John Davie, in 1620. The poor law union of Crediton comprises 29 parishes or places, and contains a population of 22,076. Near the church are some slight remains of the episcopal palace; and some part of a chapel dedicated to St. Lawrence, once connected with one of the prebends of the collegiate church, has been formed into cottages: in the Dean's street is an ancient building, said to have formed part of the dean's house, in a portion of which, supposed to have been the refectory, the old ceiling is still preserved. At Yeo is the gable of a barn, formerly a chapel, the east window of which is in good preservation; and on the hill above Posberry is a triple intrenchment of great antiquity. Winifred, Archbishop of Mentz, and legate under several of the popes, who was eminently successful in promulgating the doctrines of Christianity among the Mercians, and suffered martyrdom in the year 354, was a native of this place.

CREECH, or CREKE (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of TAUNTON, hundred of ANDERSFIELD, W. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Taunton; containing 1296 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the river Tone, and intersected by the road from Plymouth to Bath, comprises by measurement 2218a. 2r. 13p.: there are quarries of stone of a reddish hue, of good quality for building and other purposes. The tide flows up to the Half Locks, on the Coal Harbour estate, where a very extensive traffic in salt, &c., was formerly carried on. The village has been much improved by the formation of the Bridgwater and Taunton canal, which is here crossed by a well-built bridge of brick. A new cut from this canal has been formed, under an act obtained in 1834, terminating at Chard, and communicating with the canal and coal wharfs near the bridge; it is carried over the river Tone by a handsome and extensive aqueduct, which crosses the lower road and moor, near the parish of Ruishton. The line of the Great Western railway passes under the aqueduct of the Chard canal. The living is a vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £16. 18. 9.; patron, Rev. H. Creswell; impropiators of the remainder of the rectorial tithes, Mrs. Dyer and Rev. Miles Formby. The tithes have been commuted for £383, and the glebe comprises 72 acres. The church, a spacious and handsome edifice, with a tower, is pleasantly situated on an eminence above the Tone. There is a place of worship for Baptists. Here was anciently a monastery of the Cluniac order, part of which is still perfect, and forms a substantial dwelling-house.

CREECH, EAST, a tything, in the parish of CHURCH-KNOWLE, union of WAREHAM and PURBECK, hundred of HASILOR, Wareham division of DORSET, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Wareham; containing 183 inhabitants. It is about a mile north-west of the parochial church.

CREED (ST. CREED), a parish, in the union of ST. AUSTELL, W. division of the hundred of POWDER and of the county of CORNWALL; including nearly the whole of the town of Grampound, and containing 758 inhabitants, of whom 265 are in that portion exclusive of Grampound. The parish is situated on the river Fal, by which it is bounded on the west, and contains by computation 2550 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8.; net income, £351; patron, C. H. T. Hawkins, Esq. Besides the parochial church, there is a small chapel of ease at Grampound, in a ruinous condition. On the estate of Nantellon are vestiges of two ancient intrenchments, each inclosing about one acre.

CREED, a tything, in the parish of BOSHAM, union of WEST BOURNE, hundred of BOSHAM, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX; containing 64 inhabitants.

CREEKSEA, or CRIXETH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MALDON, hundred of DENGIE, S. division of ESSEX, 2 miles (N. W. by W.) from Burnham; containing 199 inhabitants. This parish, which is of small extent, is bounded on the north by the river Crouch, over which is a ferry to Wallasea island, from the south side of the parish, where the marshes are protected from inundation by strong embankments nine feet in height. Near the mouth of the river is a creek flowing from the sea, from which circumstance the place is supposed to have derived its name. The living is a discharged rectory, to which the vicarage of Althorne was united in 1811, valued in the king's books at £9. 8. 10.; net income, £336; patron, J. Robinson, Esq. The church is a neat plain edifice.

CREETING (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.) from Needham-Market; containing 286 inhabitants. The road from Ipswich to Norwich runs through the parish on the north-east, and the Stow-Market and Ipswich navigation passes along its south-western boundary. The living is a discharged rectory, with which the rectories of Creeting St. Mary and St. Olave are consolidated, valued in the king's books at £10. 0. 5. The church, which stood within thirty yards of that of St. Mary's, and in the same churchyard, was pulled down by faculty upon condition of two full services being performed in the latter, the only church now standing in the three consolidated parishes.

CREETING (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Needham-Market; containing 196 inhabitants. The road from Ipswich to Norwich, and the Stow-Market and Ipswich navigation, run through the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with those of Creeting St. Olave and All Saints, valued in the king's books at £7. 14. 2., and in the patronage of Eton College: the tithes have been commuted for £750, and the glebe comprises 62 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church was enlarged, when that of All Saints was taken down; the entrance on the south is through a Norman doorway, and the font is of Caen stone, curiously sculptured. About 42 acres of town-land are applied to the use of the poor, to whom Mrs. Uvedale, the lady of Rear-Admiral Uvedale, who is buried here, left, in 1814, £300. Here was formerly a cell to the abbey of Bernay, in Normandy, the revenue of which, at the suppression of alien establishments, was applied towards the endowment of Eton College.

CREETING (ST. OLAVE), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Needham-Market; containing 30 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with those of Creeting St. Mary and All Saints, and valued in the king's books at £4. 17. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$.; the church has been long since demolished. Robert, Earl of Morton, gave the manor to the abbey of Grestein, in Normandy, and it was under the care of some monks of that abbey.

CREETING (ST. PETER), or WEST CREETING, a parish, in the union and hundred of STOW, W. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Needham-Market; containing 213 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south by the Stow-Market and Ipswich navigation, and comprises 1335*a.* 3*r.* 31*p.* The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 2. 6.; patron and incumbent, Rev. Edward Paske, whose tithes have been commuted for £400, and whose glebe comprises 6 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is in the early English style, and has an embattled tower.

CREETON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of BOURNE, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Corby; containing 64 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 15. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £138, and the glebe contains 31 acres, to which there is a glebe-house; a rent-charge of £26 is paid to the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln, and another of £9. 12. 6. to the rector of Little Bytham.

CREIGHTON, a township, in the parish and union of UTTOXETER, S. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Uttoxeter.

CRENDAL, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of CRANBORNE, union of WIMBORNE and CRANBORNE, Wimborne division of DORSET, 2 miles (E.) from Cranborne. Potters'-clay is dug here, and a considerable quantity of earthenware made.

CRENDON, LONG (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of THAME, hundred of ASHENDEN, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Thame; containing 1656 inhabitants, of whom a few are employed in the manufacture of needles. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £134; patron, Lord Churchill. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1824. The church is a spacious edifice, with a tower rising from the centre. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Sir John Dormer, Knt., who was buried in the church, bequeathed a rent-charge of £26, which is distributed among the poor. Walter Giffard, Earl of Buckingham, and his countess, in 1162, built and endowed the abbey of Nuttley for regular canons of the order of St. Augustine: it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. John the Baptist, and, at the Dissolution, possessed a revenue valued at £495. 18. 5.: the remains have been converted into a farm-house.

CRESLOW (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of AYLESBURY, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 5 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Aylesbury; containing 7 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £3: the church is dilapidated, and the inhabitants attend divine service at Whitchurch. There are remains, chiefly consisting of an embattled tower, of the ancient mansion of Creslow House, in which there is a crypt: it was long in the possession of the Lords de Clifford. Silver and copper Roman coins have been found.

CRESSAGE, a chapelry, in the parish of COUND, union of ATCHAM, hundred of CONDOVER, S. division of SALOP, 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Much Wenlock; containing 297 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 1543 acres. The tithes have been commuted for £208. 15. 10., and there are 23 acres of glebe. The old chapel has been recently taken down, and another built, in a more convenient situation, of white freestone obtained in the neighbourhood. A national school is supported by subscription. Near Cressage are the remains of an ancient oak, supposed to have sheltered Christian missionaries previously to the building of churches; it was then called Chrest ach (Christ's oak), from which the name of Cressage is said to be derived.

CRESSING (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BRAINTREE, hundred of WITHAM, N. division of ESSEX, 3 miles (S. E.) from Braintree; containing 560 inhabitants. This parish, anciently included within that of Witham, comprises by measurement 2365*a.* 31*p.*; the soil is generally heavy, but fertile, and in some parts are indications of iron-ore. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 15. 5.; patron, Vicar of Witham; appropriator, Bishop of London. The great tithes have been commuted for £343, and the vicarial for £287, and the glebe comprises 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church contains an alabaster monument to the memory of several members of the Neville family. Cressing Temple, anciently a preceptory of the Knights Templars, was given by King Stephen, with the advowson of the church, in perpetual alms to that order: on its dissolution these possessions passed to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, and reverted to the crown at the general suppression.

CRESSINGHAM, GREAT (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of SWAFFHAM, hundred of SOUTH GREENHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, 12 miles (N. N. E.) from Brandon; containing 476 inhabitants. This parish derives its name from a small river or creek, called by the Saxons Grecca: it comprises 2426*a.* 2*r.* 27*p.* The living is a discharged rectory, with the curacy of St. George's and the rectory of Bodney united, and is valued in the king's books at £17. 18. 1., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £502. 10., and the glebe consists of 52 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres, to which there is a glebe-house; the rector has also a rent-charge of £21 from the parish of Ashill. The church is a handsome structure in the early and later English styles, with a well-proportioned tower at the west end; the chancel contains a piscina of elegant design, and some sepulchral brasses. A parochial school was erected in 1840, and is chiefly supported by the rector. At the inclosure in 1801, 35 acres were allotted to the poor, for fuel. About a mile from the village, in a field called Stone Close, is the site of an ancient parochial chapel, dedicated to St. George, where the rector holds a fair for horses and toys on the first Wednesday and Thursday in August. William Barlow, Bishop of Chichester, and George Mountaine, Archbishop of York, were rectors of the parish in 1525 and 1602, respectively.

CRESSINGHAM, LITTLE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of SWAFFHAM, hundred of SOUTH GREENHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (W.) from Watton; containing 244 inhabitants. It is situated on the declivities of a rich valley, and comprises by computation 1810 acres, of which 1350 are arable, 200 pasture, and about 230 woodland. Clermont Lodge, a neat mansion, stands on an eminence encompassed by a beautiful park. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 12. 6.; net income, £284; patron and incumbent, Rev. Thomas Baker: the glebe contains 27 acres. The church was formerly a handsome structure, in the early and decorated English styles, with a lofty tower, of which only the chancel and part of the nave are remaining: on the south side of the chancel is a piscina of elegant design, and there are several monuments to the Clermont family, who were lords of the manor. There is a school, endowed, in 1809, by Wm. Farrer, with £300; and at the inclosure, in 1777, about 10 acres were allotted to the poor.

CRESSWELL, a township, in the parish of ELMTON, union of WORKSOP, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of Derby; containing 222 inhabitants.

CRESSWELL, an ecclesiastical district, in the union of MORPETH, E. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing, in its township, 253 inhabitants. This place has its name from a spring of fresh water at the east end of the village, the strand of which affords growth to water-cresses. The district comprises the townships of Cresswell and Ellington, the former of which was a possession of the Cresswell family previous to the reign of King John: the surface is generally level; and there is a good freestone quarry. The old tower and mansion-house of the Cresswells front the sea, and have in view the fine beach and sands of Druridge bay; the tower is $21\frac{1}{2}$ feet long, and $16\frac{1}{2}$ feet wide, within, and consists of a strong room vaulted with stone, on the ground floor, and two rooms above, approached by a circular stone staircase. The new mansion, Cresswell Hall, the seat of A. J. Baker Cresswell, Esq., is a magnificent structure, erected in 1822, at great cost, from a design by Shaw, and finished both externally and internally in the most splendid style; the rooms are spacious and of elegant form, and the arrangements and fittings-up within are as appropriate as the appearance of the mansion without is handsome: it is surrounded with fine plantations. The village lies east and west, upon a slope fronting the sea; it has been rebuilt and greatly beautified by Mr. Cresswell, and is chiefly tenanted by fishermen. The district was separated from Woodhorn, for ecclesiastical purposes, in 1836: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Mr. Cresswell, with a net income of £100, and a parsonage-house, with an acre of glebe. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, and consecrated Oct. 22d, 1836, is in the Norman style, with windows of richly-painted glass, and contains 240 sittings, of which 84 are free: the site of the edifice was presented by Mr. Cresswell, by whom the expense of its erection, and of that of the parsonage-house, amounting to more than £5000, was wholly defrayed. A boys' school at Ellington is supported by the patron, and a girls' school at Cresswell by his lady: in both are about 80 children.

CRESSWELL, an extra-parochial liberty, in the S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Cheadle; containing 16 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, a sinecure, in the joint patronage of the Rev. Edward Whitby, the incumbent, and George Whitby, Esq.; net income, £20. There is no church. A place of worship has been built for Roman Catholics.

CRESSY HALL, a chapelry, in the parish of SURFLEET, union of SPALDING, wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Spalding.

CRETINGHAM (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of PLOMESGATE, hundred of LOOES, E. division of SUFFOLK, 8 miles (N. N. W.) from Woodbridge; containing 411 inhabitants, and comprising by admeasurement 1600 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £142; impropiator, T. Chenery, Esq.: there is a glebe-house, with about 23 acres of land. The church contains portions in the early and later English styles, and has, in the chancel, memorials of the Cornwallis family. Here was formerly a chapel, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

CREWE, a township, in the parish of FARNDON, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Malpas; containing 67 inhabitants. It is bounded on the west by the river Dee.

CREWE, a township, in the parish of BARTHOMLEY, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Sandbach; containing 396 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £140, of which £110 are payable to the impropiator, and £30 to the rector of the parish. A school was founded in 1729, pursuant to the will of Thomas Leadbeater, Esq., who bequeathed £30 for the erection of a house, and £120 for the maintenance of a master. Here is a station of the Grand Junction railway, from which, near Crewe Hall, diverges the Chester and Crewe railway, taking a west-north-west direction to Chester, where it unites with the Birkenhead line. The Manchester and Birmingham railway also branches off here.

CREWKERNE (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a market-town and parish, in the union of CHARD, hundred of CREWKERNE, W. division of SOMERSET, 10 miles (S. W. by S.) from Ilchester, and 132 (W. S. W.) from London; comprising the tythings of Clapton, Coombe, Easthams, Furland, Hewish, Laymore, and Woolminstone, and containing 4414 inhabitants. This place, being a royal manor, anciently enjoyed many privileges, and in the reign of Henry II. was exempt from taxation. The town is pleasantly situated in a fertile valley, watered by branches of the rivers Parret and Axe, and sheltered by hills richly planted: it consists of five principal streets, diverging from a spacious market-place, in the centre of which is a large and commodious market-house; the houses are in general well built and of handsome appearance, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. Sail-cloth, stockings, and dowlas, are manufactured. The market, which is well supplied with corn, is on Saturday; and the fair is on the 4th of September, for horses, bullocks, linen-drapery, cheese, and toys. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £158; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Winchester; impropiator, J. Hussey, Esq. The church is a spacious cruciform structure, in the decorated English style, with a lofty and highly enriched tower rising from the intersection, crowned with battlements and ornamented with angular turrets; the interior is finely arranged, the windows are large, and filled with rich tracery, and the piers and arches which support the tower are lofty and of graceful elevation. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Unitarians. The free grammar school was founded in 1449, by John de Combe, Precentor of the Cathedral of Exeter, who endowed it with land, now producing £300 per annum: it has four exhibitions, of £5 per annum each, to any college at Oxford, founded by the Rev. William Owsley, who gave a rent-charge of £20. There are two other schools, endowed with £9. 12. per annum, and two almshouses, one of which, for twelve aged men and women, was, in 1707, endowed with a rent-charge of £29, by Mrs. Mary Davis.

CRICH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BELPER, partly in the hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, partly in that of SCARSDALE, and partly in that of WIRKSWORTH, N. and S. divisions of the county of DERBY; containing, with the township of Wessington and the hamlet of Tansley, 3698 inhabitants, of whom 2619 are in the township of Crich, 5 miles (W. by S.) from Alfreton. This is a place of some antiquity, and coins of Adrian and Diocletian have been found in an adjacent lead-mine, from which circumstance it is conjectured that lead was obtained here by the Romans. It is situated on an eminence commanding extensive prospects, on the road from Alfreton to Wirksworth, and near the river Derwent, which runs on its western boundary. The parish comprises about 3400 acres, the substratum of which has long been a source of considerable wealth: its valuable lead-mines, several of which are now in operation, produce a metal of the finest quality, and appear to have been wrought continuously since the time of the Norman survey, at which period "Leuric had a lead-mine at Cric." The manor of Wakebridge in the parish, which formerly belonged to Darley Abbey, still enjoys the privilege of exemption from king's duty on lead-ore, the mine of which is considered the richest in the county. Here are also limestone and gritstone quarries, the stone of the latter of which has been in demand for the use of the North-Midland railway, and is applied to building and other purposes. The village a short time since was inconsiderable, but rose into importance from the establishment of a cotton-manufactory at Frichly, in 1793, and in 1810 received the grant of a market, which, however, was discontinued on the decline of the factory. The chief employment is framework knitting; and there are also manufactories for the spinning of candle-wicks, and one for bobbin-turning. Cattle-fairs are held on the 6th April and 11th October. The Cromford canal passes along the western side of the parish, and, through a tunnel on the south, joins the Nottingham canal; the North-Midland railroad runs through the eastern part, and a branch has been laid down to a limestone quarry at the top of the village, for the purpose of conveying the stone to twelve kilns lately built. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 10. 10.; net income, £98; patron and impropiator, Sir W. W. Dixie, Bart.: the tithes were commuted for land in 1776. The church is a fine structure, with a tower surmounted by a spire, and contains several ancient monuments of the Dixie family; it is beautifully situated, commanding a splendid and extensive prospect. Among the old monuments is one supposed to be that of Sir W. de Wakebridge, who fought in the Holy Land. A church has recently been built in the hamlet of Tansley; and there are places of worship for Wesleyans, Independents, and Baptists. About one mile north of the village is Crich Cliff, a lofty hill, upon which an observatory was erected in 1789.

CRICK, a hamlet, in the parish of CAERWENT, union and division of CHEPSTOW, hundred of CALDICOT, county of MONMOUTH, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Chepstow; containing 148 inhabitants. The road leading from this village to Caerwent was a Roman way. The village contains a house, now a farm-house, where Charles I. was concealed for some time.

CRICK (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of RUGBY, hundred of GUILSBOROUGH, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 6½ miles (N. by E.) from Daventry; containing 1006 inhabitants. This place was visited by the army of Fairfax, which rested here on the night previous to the battle of Naseby, when the church and rectory-house were unroofed and otherwise damaged. The parish, which is situated on the borders of Warwickshire, and intersected by the road from Northampton to Coventry, comprises by measurement 3271 acres; the surface is rather hilly, and the soil various, in some parts clayey, in others gravelly and sandy. The manufacture of worsted stockings was formerly carried on to some extent, but has been discontinued. Coarse lime is found and used for flags, and occasionally for building. A nameless rivulet, which flows into the Avon near Dovebridge, has its source within the parish; and the Grand Union canal, connecting Leicester with the Grand Junction canal, passes through a tunnel 1524 yards in length. The Crick station on the line of the London and Birmingham railway is within two miles. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £32. 13. 1½.; net income, £890; patrons, the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford: the tithes were commuted for 560 acres of land in 1776. The church is a spacious and handsome structure, in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower; the east window of the chancel, which has been lately restored, is a very beautiful specimen of flowing tracery; the stained glass, with which all the windows were embellished, was destroyed by the soldiers of Fairfax. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; and the parochial school has an endowment of £10 per annum from Mr. William Henfray, the interest of £100 three and a half per cents. by Mr. G. Judkins, and the residue of the rents of certain lands bequeathed by Mr. Richard Drayton, in 1806, reserving £15 per annum for the purchase of a cow, to be divided among the poor on the day before Christmas-day. The old Roman Watling-street skirts the western boundary of the parish, where Roman antiquities have been found; and there are several tumuli in various parts. Archbishop Laud was rector of the parish for seven years.

CRICKET (St. THOMAS), a parish, in the union of CHARD, hundred of SOUTH PETHERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (E.) from Chard; containing 78 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the Exeter and London road, in a district of much natural beauty; and the handsome seat and extensive domain of Viscountess Bridport, relict of Admiral Viscount Bridport, form an interesting feature in the surrounding scenery. A fair is held on Whit Monday and Tuesday for cattle. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 17. 6., and in the gift of Lord Bridport: the tithes have been commuted for £92, and the glebe comprises 30 acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

CRICKET-MALHERBIE (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of CHARD, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET, 2¼ miles (S.) from Ilminster; containing 36 inhabitants. The parish stands on elevated ground, and comprises by computation 520 acres: the Creech and Chard canal passes at the distance of a mile. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 6. 3.; net income, £77; patron, Stephen Pitt, Esq.: the glebe consists of about 20 acres.

CRICKLADE, a borough and market-town, in the union of CRICKLADE and WOOTTON-BASSET, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, Cricklade and N. divisions of WILTS, 48 miles (N. by W.) from Salisbury, and 83 (W. by N.) from London; containing 2128 inhabitants. This place, which is of great antiquity, is by some supposed to have derived its name from the British Cerigwáld, signifying a country abounding with stones; and by others from the Saxon Cræcca, a brook, and Lædian, to empty, the small rivers Churn and Rey here discharging themselves into the river Isis. It is thought by Dr. Stukeley to have been a Roman station, from its position on the Roman road which connected Corinium, now Cirencester, with Spinæ, now Speen. About the year 905, Ethelwald, opposing the election of Edward the Elder to the throne, collected a large body of troops, consisting principally of East Angles, and advanced to this place on a predatory excursion, from which he retreated with his plunder before Edward, who was marching to attack him, had reached the town. In 1016, the town was plundered by Canute the Dane, since which it has not been distinguished by any event of historical importance. The town is situated in a level tract of country, on the south bank of the Isis, which has its source in the vicinity; it consists principally of one long street, and is paved from the fund called the Cricklade Way lands, varying from £150 to £170 per annum, arising from an early bequest. Waterworks have recently been constructed and pipes laid down in the main street, by a spirited individual, affording an ample supply. The market is on Saturday; there is also an extensive market for corn and cattle on the third Tuesday in every month; and a pleasure fair is held on the 23rd of September. The Thames and Severn canal runs to the north of the town, and is connected with the Wilts and Berks line by the North Wilts canal, which passes the town to the south-west. The county magistrates hold a meeting on the first Saturday in every month; and a bailiff and other officers are appointed by a jury at the court leet of the lord of the manor, who holds a court every third week for the recovery of debts under 40s. Cricklade is a borough by prescription, and exercised the elective franchise from the reign of Edward I., but with various intermissions, till that of Henry VI., since which time it has uninterruptedly continued to return two members to parliament: in consequence of notorious bribery, the franchise was, in 1782, extended to the adjoining divisions of Highworth, Cricklade and Staple, Kingsbridge, and Malmesbury. The polling-places are Cricklade, Brinkworth, and Swindon.

Cricklade comprises the parishes of St. Samson and St. Mary, the former containing 1642, and the latter 486 inhabitants, and consisting together of nearly 8000 acres, about two-thirds of which are arable; the soil is generally a rich loam, producing fine crops, and the surface is mostly flat. The living of St. Samson's is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £18. 11. 10½.; net income, £460; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Salisbury, who are also appropriators of the rectory, of which the Rev. T. Heberden is lessee. The church is a spacious and ancient cruciform structure, with a handsome square embattled tower, rising from the intersection, crowned by a pierced parapet and pinnacles, and highly ornamented with niches and pedestals: the south porch was formerly a chapel, built by the Hungerford family; and towards the east is another porch, with large battlements, having in the centre the figure of a lion couchant. The interior is of corresponding character; the piers and arches that support the tower are lofty and of graceful elevation. A stone cross, which once stood in the principal street, was removed into the churchyard, when the old town-hall was taken down. The living of St. Mary's is a discharged rectory, valued at £4. 14. 0½.; net income, £83; patron, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. The church is a very ancient structure; the chancel is separated from the nave by a circular Norman arch, and the interior contains many vestiges of its original character. In the churchyard is a handsome stone cross of one shaft on a flight of steps; the head is richly ornamented with small sculptured figures in canopied niches. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. Near St. Sampson's churchyard is a building erected in 1652, by Robert Jenner, goldsmith, of London, for the purpose of a school, which for many years was used as a poor-house, and has lately been restored to its original purpose. Among the several charitable bequests is one of a hundred acres of land granted by Charles I., out of the forest of Braydon, now producing about £125 per annum, of which one-half is given to decayed tradespeople, and the other, in equal portions, applied to the apprenticing of children, and distributed among the poor. A benefaction called Dunches' charity, consisting of lands worth £30 a year, is also, by the will of the donor, appropriated to eight decayed tradespeople not receiving parochial aid. The union comprises fourteen parishes or places, and contains a population of 13,165. In the parish of St. Mary are the remains of the priory of St. John the Baptist, founded in the reign of Henry III., now converted into a private residence. There was also an hospital, dedicated to the same patron, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £4. 10. 7.: some land belonging to it, in the parish of St. Sampson, is still called the Spital.

CRIDLING-STUBBS, a township, in the parish of WOMERSLEY, union of PRESTON (under Gilbert's act), Lower division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 4¾ miles (E.) from Pontefract; containing 159 inhabitants. It is chiefly of the same limestone bed as Womersley township, and comprises by computation about 900 acres.

CRIGGLESTONE, a township, in the chapelry of CHAPELTHORPE, parish of GREAT SANDALL, union of WAKEFIELD, Lower division of the wapentake of ABBRIGG, W. riding of YORK, 3¾ miles (S.) from Wakefield; containing 1479 inhabitants. This township lies on the Wakefield and Manchester road, in a picturesque and fertile district, and comprises 2950 acres of profitable land: it abounds in coal, which is shipped to supply the London market. Messrs. Pope and Co. of London, in 1843, opened an excellent coal-pit here, at an outlay of £30,000 to effect the "winning." Kettlethorpe Hall, an ancient family mansion, is pleasantly situated in a tastefully embellished demesne; Chapelthorpe Hall is a comfortable residence, and Woolley-Moor House commands beautiful and extensive views. There are several villages in the township, whereof the principal is that of Chapelthorpe, so called from the chapel, a neat edifice, of which the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Sandall. The annual sum of £19. 13., arising from bequests, is appropriated to the support of a Sunday school, and the relief of the poor, who have also an interest in the liberal bequest made by Alderman Scholey to the poor of the parish.

CRIMPLESHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DOWNHAM, hundred of CLACKCLOSE, W. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (E.) from Downham-Market; containing 358 inhabitants. This parish comprises 1658a. 1r. 7p., whereof 1058 acres are arable, 488 pasture, and 59 woodland. Crimplasham Hall is a handsome mansion, in the grounds of which was formerly a church. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £90; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Ely: the tithes have been commuted for £525. 1. 8., and the glebe contains 58 acres. The church is an ancient structure, in the early and decorated English styles, with a square tower; the north and south entrances are in the Norman style. A national school is supported. At the inclosure, in 1806, twelve acres were allotted to the poor, the proceeds of which, amounting to £23 per annum, are distributed in coal.

CRINGLEFORD (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of HENSTEAD, hundred of HUMBLEYARD, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Norwich; containing 191 inhabitants. This parish comprises about 1200 acres, chiefly arable, and derives its name from an ancient gravelly ford, which has been superseded by a stone bridge over the river Yare, separating the liberties of Norwich from the county. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £205; patrons and improprators, the Trustees of St. Giles' Hospital, Norwich. The church is in the later English style, with a square embattled tower. Within the parish was once a free chapel, dedicated to St. Ethelred, to which pilgrims used to resort in great numbers.

CRIPTON, a hamlet, in the parish of WINTERBOURN-CAME, union of DORCHESTER, hundred of CULLIFORD-TREE, Dorchester division of DORSET, 3½ miles (S. by E.) from Dorchester; containing 17 inhabitants.

CRITCHILL, or CRICHEL, LONG (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WIMBORNE and CRANBORNE, hundred of KNOWLTON, Wimborne division of DORSET, 6½ miles (W. S. W.) from Cranborne; containing 120 inhabitants. This parish, which received its distinguishing appellation from its greater length in comparison with the adjoining parish of More-Critchill, is divided into two tythings, called Critchill-Gouis and Critchill-Lucy, so named from their ancient lords: it comprises by admeasurement 1034 acres. The living is a rectory, united in 1774 to that of More-Critchill, and valued in the king's books at £12. 13. 8½.; the glebe consists of 110 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church has a good tower at the west end, with a massive buttress on its north side. There is a school in union with the National Society. Some vestiges of a Roman road may be traced.

CRITCHILL, MORE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WIMBORNE and CRANBORNE, hundred of BADBURY, Wimborne division of DORSET, 6 miles (N. by W.) from Wimborne; containing, with the hamlet of Manswood, 316 inhabitants, and comprising by admeasure-ment 1649 acres. The living is a rectory, with that of Long Critchill united, valued in the king's books at £10. 9. 7.; net income, £371; patron, Henry Sturt, Esq. The church is a small ancient structure, having at the west end an embattled tower, with a porch of modern erection, and has been lately beautified with a western window in the later English style, and otherwise much improved at the expense of the patron: it had a chantry, well endowed with land by John de Bridport; in the 2nd of Edward III., for a chaplain to pray daily for his soul. There is a national school. Traces of the Roman road from Badbury Rings to Old Sarum may be seen in the parish.

CRIXETH, county ESSEX.—See CREEKSEA.

CROBOROUGH, with BLACKWOOD, a township, in the parish of HORTON, union of LEEK, N. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 5½ miles (W.) from Leek; containing 526 inhabitants.

CROCK-STREET, a hamlet, in the parishes of ILMINSTER and DONYATT, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, union of CHARD, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Ilminster; containing 54 inhabitants. A considerable quantity of coarse earthenware is made.

CROCKER-HILL, a hamlet, in the parish of BOX-GROVE, union of WEST HAMPNETT, hundred of BOX and STOCKBRIDGE, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX; containing 52 inhabitants.

CROCKERN-WELL, a hamlet, partly in the parish of BISHOP-CHERITON, and partly in that of DREWSTEIGTON, hundred of WONFORD, Crockern-Well and S. divisions of DEVON, 7 miles (S. W.) from Crediton. It abounds with beautiful scenery. Here was formerly a chapel, of which there are no remains.

CROCKERNE-PILL, a hamlet, in the parish of EASTON-IN-GORDANO, union of BEDMINSTER, hundred of PORTBURY, E. division of SOMERSET, 5½ miles (N. W.) from Bristol; containing 1748 inhabitants. This hamlet, which had its rise in the seventeenth century, is situated on the banks of the Avon, near the junction of that river with the Severn, and is chiefly inhabited by mariners, engaged in piloting vessels to and from Bristol, and down the channel, under the regulations of the company of merchant adventurers of Bristol.

CROFORD, a tything, in the parish of WIVELISCOMBE, union of WELLINGTON, W. division of the hundred of KINGSBURY and of SOMERSET; containing, with the tything of Nunnington, 455 inhabitants.

CROFT (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of LEOMINSTER, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, 5½ miles (N. N. W.) from Leominster; containing, with the township of Newton, 144 inhabitants, and consisting of 1064 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Yarpole annexed, valued in the king's books at £7. 11. 3., and in the patronage of Mrs. Davis, with a net income of £283: the tithes of Croft have been commuted for £120, and there is a glebe of 71½ acres. At Castle Parke, on an eminence to the north-west of the village, is Croft Ambery, an ancient British camp, with a double ditch and rampart.

CROFT, with SOUTHWORTH, a township, in the parish of WINWICK, union of WARRINGTON, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCAS-TER, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Newton-in-Mackerfield; containing 1155 inhabitants. A church in the later English style, with a tower and spire, was erected in 1833; at an expense of £2414; and there is a Roman Catholic chapel.

CROFT, a parish, in the union of BLABY, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Hinckley; containing 321 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 1000 acres: the soil is various, to the north of the village light, with some good pasture land near the borders of a brook which flows through the parish, and on the south of the village a stiffish clay. There is a large quarry, supplying an excellent material for building and for the repairing of roads; and about one-fourth of the population is employed in frame-work knitting. The village is situated on a granite rock rising from the edge of the brook, and continuing in a ridge northward, until it terminates in a remarkable conical hill, covered with verdure, and conspicuous for many miles round. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 3. 4.; net income, £582; patron and incumbent, Rev. Robert Thos. Adnutt. A portion of the tithes have been commuted for land, and the remainder for a rent-charge of £70. 8.; the glebe comprises 250 acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

CROFT (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, Marsh division of the wapentake of CANDLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Wainfleet; containing 649 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £23. 7. $3\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £388; patron and improprator, Lord Monson. There is a trifling bequest for the poor.

CROFT (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of DARLINGTON, wapentake of GILLING-EAST, N. riding of YORK; containing 744 inhabitants, of whom 422 are in the township of Croft, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Darlington. The parish comprises the townships of Croft, Dalton-upon-Tees, part of Great Smeaton, and part of Stapleton; and consists by measurement of 6384 acres, of which 5032 are in tillage, and 1352 meadow and pasture. This place has been latterly much resorted to for the benefit of its sulphureous springs, which are similar to those of Harrogate. The spa is in the township of Croft, about four miles from Darlington, and on the property of Sir William Chaytor, Bart., late of Witton Castle: it was first brought into notice in 1668, and so early as 1713 the water had acquired such fame that it was sold in London in sealed bottles at an exorbitant price. In 1808 the present proprietor erected a capacious hotel, with suitable conveniences, and a number of lodging-houses for the accommodation of visitors; and over the spring a splendid suite of baths have been built, which were thrown open to the public in 1829. One gallon of the water contains, of muriate of lime, 9 grs.; carbonate of lime, 42 grs.; sulphate of magnesia, 74 grs.; sulphate of lime, 28 grs.; and carbonate of iron, 1 gr. The air of Croft is remarkably pure, the surrounding country is pleasant, and the views on the banks of the Tees are delightful, commanding a prospect over an extensive tract in the highest possible state of cultivation: the whole of the township belongs to Sir William Chaytor, who is at present erecting an elegant mansion-house here. The village is neatly built, and situated on the river, over which is a handsome stone bridge of seven arches, about 200 yards distant from the spa; it is 414 feet in length, and from the bed of the river to the top of the iron-railing 59 feet high; and was completed by Henry Welch, Esq., C. E., in 1839. At about a quarter of a mile below the village, the Great North of England railway crosses the Tees, and enters the county of York over a splendid oblique viaduct of four arches, at an angle of 45° , and 54 feet above the level of the river, and runs through the parish for about two miles; the station is only about one hundred yards from the village, although locally in the parish of Hurworth. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 8. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £825. The church is an ancient edifice, and exhibits specimens of various styles of English architecture; it contains an altar-tomb to a member of the Milbank family, and another to one of that of Clervaux, the ancestors of Sir William Chaytor. A school has a small endowment. Burnet, the author of the Theory of the Earth, was born here in 1635.

CROFTON, a township, in the parish of THURSBY, union of WIGTON, CUMBERLAND ward, and E. division of CUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Wigton; containing 80 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Wampool, and near the road from Wigton to Carlisle and the railway from Carlisle to Maryport.

CROFTON, in the parish of ORPINGTON, union of BROMLEY, hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Foot's-Cray. This is said to have been once a parish, and the village to have been destroyed by fire.

CROFTON, a district incumbency, in the parish and hundred of TITCHFIELD, union of FAREHAM, Fareham and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Fareham; containing 809 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Titchfield: the chapel, dedicated to the Holy Rood, is a very ancient edifice, lately thoroughly repaired. A school, in connexion with the National Society, was built in 1839, at the expense of the Rev. David Haynes.

CROFTON, with WOLFHALL, a tything, in the parish of GREAT BEDWIN, union of HUNGERFORD, hundred of KINWARDSTONE, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and S. divisions of WILTS; containing 180 inhabitants.

CROFTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of PRESTON (under Gilbert's act), Lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, W. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Wakefield; containing 389 inhabitants. This parish is in the honour of Pontefract, and comprises about 970 acres of fertile land, including the hamlet of Birkwood: the roads from Doncaster and Pontefract to Wakefield form a junction here. Coal-mines were extensively wrought for several years, but have been discontinued for some time, though much coal yet remains. The village is pleasant and well built, and has an ever-flowing fountain in the centre. At Oakenshaw, in the parish, the North-Midland railway is carried over the Barnsley canal by a viaduct of five segmental arches of 60 feet span each, and at the height of 60 feet above the level of the water; the whole is constructed of brickwork with stone quoins. Here, also, one of the most extensive cuttings in the whole line was made through rock, shale, and bind, the greatest depth being 50 feet, and the quantity of earth removed, amounting to 600,000 cubic yards, most of which was used to form the Oakenshaw embankment. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 0. 2½., and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster; net income, £334. The church is a small cruciform structure, in the later English style, with a low central tower. The original church stood on low swampy ground, nearly a mile from the present site: the only remains of it are the names of "Church Field" given to a field of the glebe land, and "Church Hill" to the particular spot where it stood. Dr. Richard Fleming, founder of Lincoln College, Oxford, was a native of this place; the remains of his arms, carved in stone, still appear over the entrance of the porch of the present edifice.

CROGLIN (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Kirk-Oswald; containing 336 inhabitants. The parish derives its name from the river Croglin, by which it is bounded on the south; the surface is very uneven, rising in some places into eminences of mountainous elevation, whereof the highest is Croglin Fell. The strata are chiefly limestone, and freestone of a reddish colour, which are quarried, with some porphyry; and veins of coal are likewise found. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £223; patron, the Rev. John Jackson. A school, built by subscription in 1724, and conducted on the national plan, is endowed with the interest of £50, given in 1723 by the Rev. J. Hunter, rector, and an allotment of 24 acres, appropriated on the inclosure, and yielding about £14 per annum.

CROKEHAM, a hamlet, in the parish of THATCHAM, union of NEWBURY, hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, 4½ miles (S. E.) from Newbury. Here was formerly a chapel, which has been demolished.

CROMER (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of NORTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 21 miles (N.) from Norwich, and 130 (N. N. E.) from London; containing 1240 inhabitants. This place, originally of much greater extent, included the town of Shipden, which with its church and a considerable number of houses forming another parish, was destroyed by an inundation of the sea, in the reign of Henry IV. Of the numerous ravages of the ocean the last occurred in 1837, when a large portion of the cliffs and houses, with part of the jetty, was washed away: in 1838, on the eastern side, a groin of about 150 yards in length, running out from the cliff to the north, was laid down, which, aided by a sea wall there erected, it is expected will prevent the recurrence of a similar catastrophe from that quarter; and the security of the cliffs immediately below the town has been provided for, by a breast-work of stone and flint, with winding approaches, to the beach and jetty. The town is situated on a high cliff, on the north-eastern coast of Norfolk, commanding a fine view of Cromer bay, which, from its dangerous navigation, is by seamen called the "Devil's Throat;" it was formerly inhabited only by a few fishermen, but, from the excellence of its beach, the salubrity of its air, and the beauty of its scenery, it has become a bathing-place of some celebrity; many of the houses are badly built and of mean appearance, but those near the sea are commodious and pleasant, and there are several respectable lodging-houses and inns for visitors. There are a circulating library and a subscription news-room; and a regatta is occasionally celebrated. Attempts have often been made to construct a pier, but the works have invariably been carried away by the sea: the jetty of wood, about 70 yards long, erected in 1822, forms an attractive promenade, as well as the fine beach at low water, which, on account of the firmness of the sand, and its smooth surface, affords also an excellent drive for several miles. Cromer is within the limits of the jurisdiction of the port of Cley: vessels of from 60 to 100 tons' burthen discharge their cargoes of coal and timber on the beach, and there are 18 large vessels and 20 herring-boats belonging to the place, besides about 40 boats, employed in the taking of lobsters and crabs, which are abundant, and of superior flavour. A fair, chiefly for toys, is held on Whit-Monday. The county magistrates hold a meeting every alternate Monday. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 4. 9.; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Ely. The church was built in the reign of Henry IV., and was in ruins from the time of Cromwell till about 50 years ago, when it was newly roofed and repaired; it is a handsome structure of freestone and flint, in the later English style, with a lofty square embattled tower; and the western entrance, the north porches, and the chancel, though much dilapidated, are fine specimens. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A free grammar school was endowed in 1505 by Sir Bartholomew Read, and further by the Goldsmiths' Company in 1821; but no application having been made for classical instruction, it was remodelled by the company on the national plan. A girls' school is supported by Mrs. Burbeck. Roger Bacon, a mariner of Cromer, is said to have discovered Iceland in the reign of Henry IV.

CROMFORD, a chapelry, in the parish and hundred of WIRKSWORTH, union of BAKEWELL, S. division of the county of DERBY, 1 mile (N. by E.) from Matlock; containing 1407 inhabitants. This place, which is pleasantly situated on the river Derwent, was an incon-siderable village prior to the year 1776, when Sir Richard Arkwright, having purchased the manor, erected mills, which were the first ever put in motion by water, and established a cotton-manufactory of large extent. Since this period it has greatly increased, and is now a flourishing place, consisting chiefly of neat and commodious dwellings for the persons engaged in the factories, of which many are built round an open space in which a small customary market is held on Saturday, and others chiefly in detached situations. The cotton manufacture affords employment to more than 1000 persons; there are a manufactory for hats, one for ginghams, on a small scale, and a paper-manufactory; and a great quantity of lapis calaminaris is exported annually. In the neighbourhood are extensive mines of lead and calamine, and quarries of marble and limestone. The Cromford canal communicates with the Erewash canal near Langley bridge, and commodious wharfs and warehouses have been constructed on its banks. The Cromford and High Peak railway, for the conveyance of minerals and merchandise, commences at this place, and pursues its course to the Peak Forest canal, near Whaley bridge; the whole line is thirty-three miles, in which it attains a rise of 990 feet above the level of the Cromford canal; it was opened in 1830. The chapel, a small neat building in the Grecian style, begun by Sir Richard Arkwright, in 1794, and completed by his son, Richard Arkwright, Esq., who endowed it with £50 per annum, was consecrated in 1797. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £96; patrons, the family of Arkwright; appropriator, Dean of Lincoln, whose tithes have been commuted for £90, and the vicarial for £11. The Wesleyans have a place of worship. Two schools are supported, for the instruction of children employed in the factory; and almshouses for six widows were founded, in 1651, by Mary Talbot.

CROMHALL (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of THORNBURY, Upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Wickwar; containing, with the tything of Cromhall-Lygon, 732 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Wotton-under-Edge to Bristol, and derives the name Abbots, affixed to one of its tythings, from its having belonged to the abbot and convent of St. Augustine in Bristol, to whom it was given by Lord Berkeley, in 1148. The parish comprises by measurement 2500 acres; the high lands abound with excellent limestone, of which a great quantity is burnt into lime; and a coal-mine has been opened within the last few years, but the veins being on the edge of the coal basin are broken, and the produce is small and slaty. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 9. 2., and in the gift of Oriel College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £452, and the glebe comprises 85 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church, with the exception of the tower, which is of earlier date, and placed on the north side, is a handsome structure, in the later English style. There are some remains of a cell on Abbotside Hill.

CROMPTON, a township, in the parish of OLDHAM-CUM-PRESTWICH, union of OLDHAM, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Rochdale; containing, with the villages of Shaw, High Crompton, and Cowlshaw, 6729 inhabitants, who are chiefly employed in the spinning and manufacturing of cotton, but extensively also in collieries and stone-quarries. The situation is bleak, and the soil poor, affording little encouragement for agriculture. The ancient mansion of Compton Hall has fallen into decay. A free chapel at Shaw, of great antiquity, after having been twice enlarged, was rebuilt in the latter part of the last century.

CROMWELL (St. Giles), a parish, in the union of SOUTHWELL, N. division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Newark; containing 203 inhabitants, and comprising about 1400 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 2. $3\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £420; patron, Duke of Newcastle. The tithes were commuted for land in 1773; the glebe consists of 240 acres, to which there is a good glebe-house. A small school for girls is chiefly supported by the lady of the rector.

CRONDALL (All Saints), anciently CRUNDEHÄLLE, a parish, in the union of HARTLEY-WINTNEY, hundred of CRONDALL, Odiham and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Farnham; containing, with the tythings of Crondall, Crookham, Dippenhall, Ewshott, and Swanthrope, 2199 inhabitants, of whom 423 are in the township of Crondall. The parish comprises by computation nearly 10,000 acres, situated midway between Farnham and Odiham, and of which 4612 are arable, 740 pasture and meadow, 904 woodland, and 3650 common. Almost every variety of soil is to be found, from barren shingly gravel and sand, to rich alluvial mould, productive marls, and dry clays on a chalk substratum, yielding abundant crops of corn, clover, turnips, &c., and hops almost rivalling the productions of the celebrated "Hartground" at Farnham. In some spots chalk, or marl stones, are dug, adapted for rough buildings; and a stratum of fine chalk runs diagonally through the southern end of the parish. A rivulet has its source in the village, and, flowing through the parish, forms a tributary to the river Loddon; and the London and South-Western railway and the Basingstoke canal cross the parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £22. 5. $7\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £441; patrons and impropiators, Master and Brethren of the Hospital of St. Cross, Winchester, who have leased the great tithes to the Marquess of Winchester. The church is of great antiquity, the nave being of early and the chancel of later Norman, with zig-zag mouldings; it contains several monuments, some with Saxon inscriptions, and others with figures in brass, and is said to have suffered much during the wars of the commonwealth. A district church, in the early English style, built by subscription, has lately been consecrated; and there are places of worship for Independents, Ranters, and Bryanites. The late Henry Maxwell, Esq., of Ewshott House, the principal residence in the parish, presented a building for a school, in connexion with the Establishment, and bequeathed a sum of £1250 for the maintenance of a master. A national school has been erected. At the north-eastern extremity of the parish is Cæsar's Camp, a spot of singular and commanding position; the earthworks are of considerable extent, with deep ditches, and in the centre is a spring.

CRONTON, a township, in the parish and union of PRESCOT, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Prescot; containing 402 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £105, payable to King's College, Cambridge, and the vicarial for £52. 10.

CROOK, with BILLY-ROW, a township, in the parish of BRANCEPETH, union of AUCKLAND, N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Bishop-Auckland; containing 538 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 4310 acres. Crook is a scattered village, situated on the road between Willington and Wolsingham, and partly extending into the adjoining township of Helmington Row. Coal is worked. A branch of the Clarence railroad, from Ferry Hill upwards, affords an easy communication with the coast; and the Bishop-Auckland and Weardale railway terminates here, after a course of eight miles, from the Stockton and Darlington line. The Incorporated Society, in 1841, granted £50 in aid of the expense of building a chapel, containing 306 free sittings. The tithes have been commuted for £68. 16. 8.

CROOK, a chapelry, in the parish, union, and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Kendal; containing 257 inhabitants. The place is of considerable extent, and the population is chiefly employed in the woollen-manufacture, in the hamlet of Crook-Mill, where also the turning of bobbins is carried on. In the mountainous part of the district is a vein of lead, containing barytes, similar to that used in the manufacture of Wedgwood's jasper vases. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £57; patrons, Proprietors of Land. The chapel, an ancient building with a tower, stands in the centre of the chapelry; and the Society of Friends have a meeting-house and burial-ground near How.

CROOKDAKE, a hamlet, in the township and parish of BROMFIELD, union of WIGTON, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Wigton; containing 191 inhabitants.

CROOKDEAN, a township, in the parish of KIRK-WHELPINGTON, union of BELLINGHAM, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 22 miles (N. W. by N.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 9 inhabitants. It belonged to the families of Umfreville, Strother, Swinburne, Fenwick, and Harle, of whom the first-named had, in 1324, a messuage and two caracutes of land in "Crokden," which were held by one-eighth of a knight's fee. The township is situated on the south side of the river Wansbeck, and comprises 355 acres, the property of the Duke of Northumberland. The river runs against a bed of coal, from four to eight inches thick, remarkable only for its brilliant lustre and the regular cubical arrangement of its parts: a search has been made for lead, but without success.

CROOKHAM, a tything, in the parish of THATCHAM, union of NEWBURY, hundred of READING, county of BERKS, 5 miles (E.) from Newbury. It contains 2000 acres, and is ornamented with several handsome residences.

CROOKHAM, or CRECUM, a township, in the parish of FORD, union, and W. division of the ward, of GLENDALE, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Coldstream. It is on the road from Wooler to Coldstream, and comprises about 1800 acres mostly arable land, and the soil of which is extremely fertile. Pallinburn House is a handsome mansion, commanding very extensive views: the village consists principally of one street. A chapel was built in 1841, at a cost of about £400, on a site given by Sir Henry Askew, Knt. There is a place of worship for Presbyterians. Attached to the chapel is a school.

CROOKHAM, a tything, in the parish and hundred of CRONDALL, union of HARTLEY-WINTNEY, Odiham and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Odiham; containing 728 inhabitants. A district church in the early English style has lately been erected, containing 412 sittings, of which 220 are free, the Incorporated Society having granted, in 1841, £190 in aid of the expense.

CROOKHOUSE, a township, in the parish of KIRK-NEWTON, union of GLENDALE, W. division of GLENDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7 miles (W. N. W.) from Wooler; containing 18 inhabitants. It is situated east of the river Beaumont, and on the road between Wooler and Jedburgh. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £10. 10.

CROOM, a hamlet, in the parish of SLEDMERE, union of DRIFFIELD, wapentake of BUCKROSE, E. riding of the county of YORK, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Great Driffield; containing 31 inhabitants.

E. by E.) from Upton; containing 194 inhabitants. This parish is partly bounded on the north-west by the river Severn, and intersected from north to south by the road from Worcester to Gloucester, and comprises by measurement 1138 acres: limestone is quarried for manure. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 8. $1\frac{1}{2}$.; patron and incumbent, Rev. Charles Dunne, whose tithes have been commuted for £235, and whose glebe comprises 5 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is an old building, in the Norman style; the tower was rebuilt in 1632, when the church was enlarged by subscription.

CROOME-HILL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of UPTON-ON-SEVERN, Lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Upton and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Upton; containing 201 inhabitants. The parish consists of 977 acres; the surface is elevated, and the soil of full average productiveness. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £115, and the glebe contains nearly 61 acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

CROPREDY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union, and chiefly in the hundred of BANBURY, but partly in the hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, and partly in the Burton-Dasset division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Banbury; comprising the chapelrys of Claydon, Wardington, and Mollington, and the township of Bourton, and containing 2727 inhabitants. This place is memorable as the scene of an engagement that occurred, in 1644, between the forces of the royal army and those of the parliamentarian, near the bridge, of which some portions still remain, consisting of rudely pointed arches and projecting piers. The parish is situated on the river Cherwell, and comprises by computation 7000 acres; the soil is chiefly a rich loam, producing abundant crops, and there is a considerable portion of meadow and pasture land. The Oxford canal passes through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £26. 10. 10.; net income, £592; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Oxford. The tithes for the greater portion have been commuted for land, under various acts of inclosure. The church is in the early and decorated English styles, and contains monuments to the families of Danvers, Loveday, Gostelow, and Taylor. There are chapels of ease at Claydon, Mollington, and Wardington; and places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; also a school in union with the National Society; a school at Williamscolt, endowed with £15 per annum, by John Loveday, Esq.; and one at Great Bourton, endowed with £22, a rent-charge on lands belonging to Sir Egerton Leigh and others. Walter Calcott founded a free school, and endowed it with an annuity of £13. In Great Bourton are the remains of an interesting chapel, in the early English style, now used as the schoolroom.

CROPSTON, a township, in the parish of THURCASTON, union of BARROW-UPON-SOAR, hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Mountsorrel; containing 111 inhabitants.

CROPTHORN (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of PERSHORE, Middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Evesham; containing, with the hamlets of Charlton and Netherton, 732 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the river Avon, which bounds it on the north, and intersected by the road from Evesham to Pershore, and comprises by measurement 3735 acres, of which 1465 are in the portion exclusively of Netherton and Charlton: there are quarries of blue limestone, which is used for paving floors and for burning into lime. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14. 17. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester: the tithes were commuted for land and money payments, under inclosure acts, in 1776 and 1779; the glebe comprises 250 acres, valued at £380. The church, with the exception of the tower, was rebuilt in the reign of Henry VIII. Mrs. Mary Holland, in 1735, bequeathed £50 for the erection, and £200 for the endowment, of a school.

CROPTON, a chapelry, in the parish of MIDDLETON, union and lythe of PICKERING, N. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Pickering; containing 335 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 3824 acres, of which about 2000 are open moorland: the village adjoins Cawthorn, on the eastern acclivities of the dale of the small river Seven. Excellent limestone is obtained, and is burnt into lime for building and agricultural purposes. The tithes were commuted for land in 1765. There is a chapel of ease; also a place of worship for Wesleyans; and an estate, producing about £23 per annum, is appropriated to the support of a school. There are various tumuli, thought to be British, and a high mount called Cropton Castle; and at Cawthorn, within two miles, are vestiges of a Roman camp.

CROPWELL, BISHOP (St. GILES), a parish, in the union, and S. division of the wapentake, of BINGHAM, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 4 miles (S. W.) from Bingham; containing 533 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 1550 acres: there are quarries of blue lias, which is used for building, and for burning into lime; and also several beds of gypsum, of which great quantities are sent into different parts of the country to be made into plaster for flooring. Facility of conveyance is afforded by the Nottingham and Grantham canal, which runs through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 3. 4.; net income, £172; late patrons and appropriators, Prebendaries of Oxtun in the Collegiate Church of Southwell. The church is a handsome edifice, with a lofty square embattled tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The old Fosse-road intersects the parish.

CROPWELL-BUTLER, a chapelry, in the parish of TYTHBY, union and S. division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Nottingham; containing 678 inhabitants. This place was anciently called Crophill-Botiller, from a circular hill situated between it and Bishop-Cropwell, and from its early possessors, the Botillers, or Butlers, of Warrington, in Lancashire. The chapelry comprises 1800 acres, of which 30 were allotted, at the inclosure in 1788, to the incumbent, in commutation of tithes. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CROSBY, a township, in the parish of CROSS-CANNONBY, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of the county of CUMBERLAND, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Maryport; containing 272 inhabitants. There is a school, endowed by John Nicholson with £10 per annum.

CROSBY, a township, in the union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, partly in the parish of FLIXBOROUGH, N. division, but chiefly in the parish of BOTTESFORD, E. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINSEY, county of LINCOLN, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Glandford-Brigg; containing 199 inhabitants.

CROSBY, a township, in the parish of LEAKE, union of NORTH-ALLERTON, wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, N. riding of YORK, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Thirsk; containing 37 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1430 acres of land, of a generally fertile soil, and formed part of the estate of the late Peter Conssett, Esq. The hamlet, consisting of only a few houses, is situated on the Cod beck, and on the road from Knayton to North-Allerton.

CROSBY-GARRETT (St. ANDREW), a parish, in EAST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Brough; containing 274 inhabitants, of whom 202 are in the township of Crosby-Garrett. This parish, which comprises the townships of Crosby-Garrett and Little Musgrave, separated by the intervening chapelry of Soulbly, is bounded on the north-east by the river Eden, and on the south-west by a lofty verdant hill, called Crosby Fell. The village is beautifully situated at the foot of the Fell, in a deep and romantic valley, abounding with pleasing and picturesque scenery. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 4. $4\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £122; patron, William Crawford, Esq., lord of the manor. The church, which is seated on an eminence overlooking the village, is a spacious and venerable structure, containing portions of the Norman style. A small school has an endowment of about £8 per annum.

CROSBY, GREAT, a chapelry, in the parish of SEFTON, union and hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 7 miles (N. by W.) from Liverpool; containing 1946 inhabitants. This place is pleasantly situated on the coast, and is much resorted to for bathing. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £119; patron, Rector of Sefton. The chapel was rebuilt in 1774. There is also a Roman Catholic chapel. A grammar school was founded in 1618, by James Harrison, a native of the place, merchant of London, with an endowment of £50 a year; the school-house is a good building of freestone, and the school is under the direction of the Merchant Taylors' Company, London. There is likewise a school for girls, founded under the will of Catherine Halsall, with an endowment of £25 per annum.

CROSBY, HIGH, a township, in the parish of CROSBY-UPON-EDEN, union of CARLISLE, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Carlisle; containing 146 inhabitants. This township is beautifully situated, and the air is remarkably salubrious.

CROSBY, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of SEFTON, union and hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Liverpool; containing 394 inhabitants. There is a Roman Catholic chapel. At Harkirk, in the township, a number of Saxon and other ancient coins was discovered in 1611.

CROSBY, LOW, a township, in the parish of CROSBY-UPON-EDEN, union of CARLISLE, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Carlisle; containing 133 inhabitants. The village is pleasantly situated on the line of the military road from Newcastle to Carlisle.

CROSBY-RAVENSWORTH (St. Lawrence), a parish, in WEST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Orton; containing, with the townships of Mauld's-Meaburn, Reagill, and part of Birbeck-Fells, 909 inhabitants, of whom 323 are in the township of Crosby-Ravenworth. The parish comprises 894²_a 3r. 19p., and is celebrated for its breed of hogs; the hams are noted for their peculiarly fine flavour. Limestone is quarried extensively. The village is situated in a fertile valley, watered by the rivers Birbeck and Lyvennet, which latter has its source at a place called Black Dub, where Charles II. halted, with his Scottish army. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 13. 4.; net income, £150; patron, Hon. F. G. Howard; impropiator, Earl of Lonsdale: the glebe consists of 28 acres, to which is attached a glebe-house. The church, a handsome structure with a square tower, was rebuilt in 1814: near it stands the ancient manorial mansion, a tower building embosomed in trees, and formerly moated. A school was founded and endowed by the Rev. William Willan, in 1630: the schoolroom was rebuilt, in 1784, by William Dent, Esq., who, with others, raised the income to £30 per annum. Another school is partly supported by an endowment of £25 per annum, accruing from land; and a third for females is endowed with £6 per annum. On the eastern side of Black Dub, and a little higher up, is a heap of stones, called Penhurrock, probably a tumulus raised by the Britons.

CROSBY-UPON-EDEN (St. John), a parish, in the union of CARLISLE, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Carlisle; containing 403 inhabitants. This place is supposed to have derived its name from an ancient cross, to which, in the time of Henry I., the inhabitants resorted for prayer, previously to the erection of the present church on its site. The parish is finely situated on the river Eden, by which it is bounded on the south for nearly three miles, and is intersected by the military road from Newcastle to Carlisle; the southern portion forms part of the beautiful and fertile vale of Eden, and towards the north the surface rises to a considerable elevation, commanding extensive and richly varied prospects. Freestone of a reddish colour, and of a fine compact texture, is obtained in the neighbouring quarries. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £3. 11. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £100; patron and appropriator, the Bishop of Carlisle. The church, situated in the village of Low Crosby, is a small ancient edifice. An additional church has been erected; and a national school, built in 1806, is supported by subscription. In the northern part of the parish the sites of the Roman wall, built by Severus, and the ditch, by Adrian, are plainly discernible.

CROSCOMBE (St. Mary), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union of SHEPTON-MALLET, hundred of WHITESTONE, E. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (S. E.) from Wells; containing 804 inhabitants. The parish comprises by admeasurement 1436 acres, and is watered by a small river, which in its course turns several mills, whereof two are for grinding corn, one for winding silk, and another used as a stocking manufactory. A market, granted by Edward I., was formerly held; it has been long discontinued, but there is a fair on Lady-day. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 6. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of five Trustees: the tithes have been commuted for £200, and the glebe comprises 15 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is beautifully situated, and is a handsome edifice in the later English style, the tower of which is surmounted by a good spire; the pews are of carved oak. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists, near which stands an ancient cross, fourteen feet high. In the vicinity are vestiges of a Roman encampment, called Masbury Castle.

CROSS, a tything, in the parish of PORTBURY, union of BEDMINSTER, hundred of PORTBURY, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 98 inhabitants.

CROSS, ST.—See WINCHESTER.

CROSSLAND, NORTH and SOUTH, in the parish of ALMONDBURY, union of HUDDERSFIELD, Upper division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (S. W.) from Huddersfield; containing 2826 inhabitants. The scenery in this neighbourhood is beautifully varied, consisting, to a great extent, of hill and dale, and the soil is rich and fertile. The chapelry of South Crossland comprises by measurement 1840 acres, of which about 250 are arable, 1100 meadow and pasture, 290 woodland, and 192 common: stone of excellent quality is extensively quarried. Crossland Hall and Healey House, each a good residence, are situated here. The manufacture of woollen-cloth is carried on to a considerable extent. The chapel, lately made a district church, was erected in 1828, in the English style, with lancet windows, and a tower, at the expense of £2321, granted by the Commissioners for Building Additional Churches; it contains 650 sittings, of which 300 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Vicar of Almondbury, with a net income of £150. A rent-charge of £3 was given by Godfrey Beaumont, towards the support of a school; and in 1749, Sir John L. Kaye, Bart., gave land for the erection of a schoolroom, which has since been rebuilt. A national school was erected in 1835.

CROSTONE, a chapelry, in the parish and union of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Halifax; containing 11,685 inhabitants. This place, which derives its name from an ancient cross, now fallen to decay, comprises the two townships of Stansfield and Langfield, and is intersected by the Manchester and Leeds railway; the surface is mountainous, and the scenery romantic. The population is partly employed in the cotton and worsted manufactures. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Vicar of Halifax, with a net income of £150: the chapel, or district church, was rebuilt in the early English style in 1836, at a cost of £3000, defrayed by the Church Commissioners, and contains 1030 sittings, of which 430 are free, and 405 appropriated to different farms.

CROSS-WAY-HAND, an extra-parochial district, in the union of OUNDLE, hundred of WILLYBROOK, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (N. W.) from Oundle; containing 8 inhabitants.

CROSTHWAITE (St. KENTIGERN), a parish, in the union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (N. by W.) from Keswick; containing 4759 inhabitants, and comprising the townships of Borrowdale, Braithwaite, Cole-dale, Newlands, Thornthwaite, St. John's-Castlerigg with Wythburn, Keswick, and Underskiddaw. This parish, which is very extensive, produces copper and lead ores, with plumbago, or black-lead, and abounds with interesting objects, noticed in the article on Keswick. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £50. S. $11\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £312; patron, Bishop of Carlisle; improprators, Sir John B. Walsh, Bart., and others. The church, an ancient fabric, was roofed with slate in 1812, having been previously covered with lead. Adjoining the churchyard is a free school, founded and endowed prior to 1571, and having an income of about £100 per annum; and in another school girls are taught on the national system. Near the head of the Lake are two saline springs, formerly in great repute among the inhabitants.

CROSTHWAITE, a parochial chapelry, in the parish of HEVERSHAM, union and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Kendal; containing, with the constablewick of Lyth, 717 inhabitants. This extensive chapelry is bounded on the south-west by the mountainous ridge called Lyth Fell, or Whitbarrow Scar. The village of Churchton is small, but neatly built, and is situated in a picturesque and fertile vale. The manufacture of paper is carried on to a moderate extent, and there are a malting establishment and a corn-mill: in the hamlet of Raw are several lime-kilns; and at Pool-bank is a manufactory of wooden hoops. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £113. The chapel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and rebuilt in 1813, at the expense of the landholders, is beautifully situated near the village of Churchton. George Cocke, in 1665, bequeathed £60 for a school; the endowment arising from the bequest, augmented by the interest of £300, bequeathed by Tobias Atkinson, in 1817, and £13, out of the general fund, amounts to £37 per annum. In Lyth Moss several large trees have been discovered beneath the surface.

CROSTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, and formerly a market-town, partly in the unions of ORMSKIRK, CHORLEY and PRESTON, in the hundred of LEYLAND, N. division of the county of LANCASTER; containing, with the townships of Bispham, Bretherton, Croston, Mawdesley, and Ulnes-Walton, 3939 inhabitants; but, including Tarleton, and Hesketh with Becconsall, 6369 inhabitants, of whom 1456 are in the township of Croston, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Chorley. This place anciently formed one of the most extensive and valuable benefices in the county; and for many ages the limits of the parish remained unaltered, but, at various periods since, it has been divided by authority of parliament into six independent parishes, viz., Croston, Hoole (separated in 1642), Chorley and Rufford, detached in 1793, and Tarleton, and Hesketh with Becconsall, in 1821. The market has fallen into disuse; but there is a cattle fair on the Monday before Shrove-Tuesday. The living comprises a rectory and a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £31. 11. $10\frac{1}{2}$.; patron, S. Master, Esq. The rectorial tithes have been commuted for £521; a rent-charge of £838 is paid to the rector of Chorley, one of £190 to the rector of Rufford, and one of £20 to the rector and vicar of Croston; the glebe contains 232 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church stands in a valley upon the margin of the river Yarrow, and was rebuilt in 1743, at an expense of £1834, defrayed by a brief. An additional church has been erected at Bretherton. The Rev. James Hiet, in 1660, built a school-house in the churchyard, and endowed it with £400; and a school of industry was established in 1802, to which Elizabeth Master, in 1809, bequeathed £200. There is also a national school.

CROSTWICK (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of St. FAITH'S, hundred of TAVERHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Norwich; containing 147 inhabitants. It comprises 690a. 3r. 7p., of which 600 acres are arable, and 30 common. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £2. 17. 6., and in the gift of the Bishop of Norwich: the tithes have been commuted for £190, and the glebe comprises 4 acres.

CROSTWIGHT (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the TUNSTEAD and HAPPING incorporation, hundred of TUNSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from North Walsham; containing 69 inhabitants. It comprises about 740 acres, of which 481 are arable. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the gift of M. Shephard, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £150, and the glebe comprises 12 acres. Near the Hall, considerable remains are to be seen of the ancient manor-house, occupied by a branch of the Walpole family, of which the heiress married an ancestor of Lord Cholmondeley, by whom the estate was sold about thirty-five years since.

CROUCH-END, a hamlet, in the parish of HORNSEY, union of EDMONTON, Finsbury division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 5 miles (N. by W.) from London. This agreeable hamlet is situated on the road from London to the village of Hornsey, in a neighbourhood embellished with beautiful scenery, and consisting of the rich pasture and meadow land for which the northern environs of the metropolis are remarkable.

CROUGHTON, a township, in the parish of St. Oswald, CHESTER, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Chester; containing 27 inhabitants. The Ellesmere canal passes through the township.

CROUGHTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BRACKLEY, hundred of KING'S-SUTTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (S. W.) from Brackley; containing 472 inhabitants. This place, which forms the most southerly parish in the county, and is bounded on the south by a part of Oxfordshire, comprises by admeasurement 2200 acres, whereof about 100 are pasture, and the rest arable, with the exception of 30 acres of plantation. It is crossed from east to west by the road between Buckingham and Deddington. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 3. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £324; patron, Viscount Ashbrook. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1807. Dr. John Friend, the learned author of a History of Physic, was born here in 1675.

CROWAN (St. CREWENNE), a parish, in the union of HELSTON, E. division of the hundred of PENWITH, W. division of CORNWALL, 6 miles (N. by W.) from Helston; containing 4638 inhabitants. The parish contains several copper-mines, of which the principal, called Binner Downs, affords employment to 780 persons. Clowance, the seat of Sir John St. Aubyn, Bart., is in the parish. A fair for cattle is held at the village of Penge. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 9. 2.; patron and impropiator, Sir John St. Aubyn. The great tithes have been commuted for £490, and the vicarial for £470, and the glebe contains 40 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church was beautified in 1832, when 190 additional sittings were provided; it contains several handsome monuments of the St. Aubyn family. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Bryanites. A spacious schoolroom was erected at an expense of £1000, by Sir John St. Aubyn, by whom the school, which is on the Lancasterian plan, is supported; and a school for girls is partly maintained by subscription. From Crowan Beacon, a heap of stones of a conical form, and probably a cairn, are fine views of the surrounding country. Near the farms of Tregear and Drym are slight remains of an encampment; at Burneston are vestiges of an ancient chapel; and on the Barton of Boletto is a singular spot, called Hangman's Barrow.

CROWBOROUGH.—See CROBOROUGH.

CROWCOMBE (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of WILLITON, hundred of WILLITON and FREE-MANNERS, W. division of SOMERSET, 10 miles (N. W. by N.) from Taunton; containing, with the hamlet of Flaxpool, 673 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the road from Taunton to Minehead, comprises by measurement 3063 acres; the surface is finely varied, and the hills command an extensive view of the greater portion of Somersetshire, the Bristol Channel, and the Welsh coast. Some veins of copper have been found in the sides of the Quantock hills, and in the churchyard; and coal is supposed to exist in the western portion of the parish. Stone is quarried for building, and for burning into lime. The place was formerly of greater importance than it is at present; it was a borough, and the inhabitants being incorporated, enjoyed various pri-viliges: a portreeve is still annually chosen at the court leet of the lord of the manor. At the entrance of the village is an ancient cross, in good preservation. A weekly market was granted in the reign of Henry III., and three annual fairs were once held; but the market has been long discontinued, and of the fairs, only one is held, on the 31st of October. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £32. 14. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$.; patron, Robert Harvey, Esq. The church is an ancient edifice, built of hewn stone, having a tower formerly surmounted by an octagonal spire, which was struck down by lightning in 1723, and was repaired at a cost of £231: the interior was neatly fitted up in 1534, with well carved oak; and the north aisle, a handsome addition to the original structure, was built by the Carews, to whom there are several fine monuments. Fragments of a cross are visible in the churchyard, and opposite to the church are the remains of another. Thomas Carew, in 1733, founded and endowed a school, of which the income amounts to £41; and there is another, supported by a bequest of the Rev. Dr. James, in 1716, with which land was purchased, now yielding about £12 annually: they are on the national system. In the vicinity of the courthouse is a spring which ebbs and flows with the tide. Near the village is some land called the Field of Battle, where an engagement is said to have taken place during Monmouth's rebellion.

CROWELL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of THAME, hundred of LEWKNOR, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (E. S. E.) from Tetsworth; containing 169 inhabitants. It is situated at the foot of the Chiltern hills, and comprises about 800 acres, of which three-fourths are arable, and the remainder woodland; the soil on the hill is chalky, and on the low lands light. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 9. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Baroness Wenman: the tithes have been commuted for £240, and the glebe consists of 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The Roman Ikeneld-street passes through the parish.

CROWFIELD, a chapelry, in the parish of CODDENHAM, union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from Needham-Market; containing 385 inhabitants. It is situated near the road from Ipswich to Debenham. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Coddenham; impropiator, Sir W. F. F. Middleton, Bart. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints. A school is supported by the Hon. Lady Middleton.

CROWHURST (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of GODSTONE, First division of the hundred of TANDRIDGE, E. division of SURREY, 4 miles (S. E.) from Godstone; containing 350 inhabitants. It is crossed by the Dover railway, and comprises by computation 2000 acres, of which 1150 are arable, and 780 meadow and pasture. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £65; patron and impropiator, George Rush, Esq., whose tithes have been commuted for £261. 7., and who has a glebe of nearly 2 acres. The church is in the early style, with a tower and spire; in the interior are several ancient brasses to the Gaynsfords and others; the windows contain remains of stained glass. A school is supported by subscription. According to tradition, Henry VIII., on his way to Anna Boleyn at Hever Castle, visited Crowhurst-place, formerly the seat of the Gaynsfords, an old mansion surrounded by a moat.

CROWHURST (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of BATTLE, hundred of BALDSLOW, rape of HASTINGS, E. division of SUSSEX, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S.) from Battle; containing 326 inhabitants. This parish is finely situated, and beautifully diversified with hill and dale: about 70 acres are planted with hops. The chief substrata are limestone, sandstone, and iron-stone, which last is abundant, and was formerly wrought extensively, and smelted in several large furnaces erected for the purpose: there are also some powder-mills in the parish. The village is in a picturesque valley, in which also the church forms a pleasing feature. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the gift of T. Papillon, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £253, and the glebe comprises 24 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church, of which the nave was rebuilt in 1794, is a handsome structure, in the early and decorated English styles, with a square embattled tower: in the churchyard is a fine yew-tree, measuring 27 feet in girth, at a height of four feet from the ground. A school is chiefly supported by the rector and curate. Near the church are some interesting remains of an ancient religious house, of which the chapel is still in tolerable preservation.

CROWLAND, or CROYLAND (St. BARTHOLOMEW AND St. GUTHLAC), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of PETERBOROUGH, wapentake of ELLOE, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (N. by E.) from Peterborough, and 89 (N.) from London; containing 2973 inhabitants. During the heptarchy this place was the retreat of St. Guthlac, who, in the reign of Cenred, eighth king of Mercia, retired from the persecution of the pagan Britons into a hermitage, near which Ethelbald, in 716, founded a Benedictine monastery to the honour of St. Mary, St. Bartholomew, and St. Guthlac, and endowed it with a considerable sum of money, and with "the whole island of Croyland, formed by the four waters of Shepisha on the east, Nena on the west, Southea on the south, and Asendylk on the north, with a portion of the adjoining marshes, and with the fishery of the Nene and Welland." This monastery, which, from the marshy nature of the soil, was built upon a foundation of piles, having been destroyed by the Danes in 870, was rebuilt by King Edred, in the year 948: in 1091 it was by an accidental fire reduced to a heap of ruins, from which, under the influence of its abbot, who granted a plenary indulgence to such as should contribute to its restoration, it was again rebuilt, in 1112, but was destroyed by a like cause, about forty years afterwards; it was a third time restored, with increased splendour, and continued to flourish till the Dissolution, when its revenue was £1217. 5. 11. The conventual buildings, which, from neglect, were gradually falling to decay, were almost entirely demolished during the parliamentary war, when the monastery was occupied as a garrison: the remains are highly interesting, consisting chiefly of the western piers of the eastern portion, in the Norman style, and of part of the nave and aisles of the abbey church, in which the south piers and arches, and part of the clerestory, are remaining, the western portion of which is partly Norman, and partly in the early and later English styles: the north aisle of the nave has been restored, and is now used as the parish church.

The TOWN, which is accessible only by artificial roads, consists of four principal streets, separated by water-courses, and communicating with each other by means of an ancient triangular stone bridge of singular construction, erected in the reign of Edward II., and consisting of one principal and finely groined arch, from which diverge three pointed arches over the streams Welland, Nene, and Catwater; it is in the decorated English style, and on one side is a mutilated figure of Ethelbald, in a sitting posture, holding a globe in the right hand. The market has been removed to Thorney, in the county of Cambridge; but a fair is held, commencing on the festival of St. Bartholomew, and continuing for twelve days. The parish comprises about 13,000 acres of arable and pasture land, in nearly equal portions, a part of which is what is here called "wash land," on account of its liability to be flooded after continual rains: the parish includes part of Deeping-fen, and a large estate named Postland, comprehending 6000 acres, the property of the Marquess of Exeter. The soil, under the influence of an efficient system of irrigation, has been greatly improved, and much of the land, formerly unprofitable, from the morasses with which it was overspread, has been converted into rich pastures and fruitful corn-fields. A great number of geese and wild fowl are sent to the neighbouring markets, and an extensive fishery is carried on, for the privilege of which £300 per annum, formerly paid to the abbot, are now received by the crown. The LIVING is a rectory not in charge; net income, £115; patrons, alternately, T. O. Hunter and James Whitsed, Esqrs. The church, though consisting only of the north aisle of the nave of the abbey church, is a commodious and very handsome edifice, chiefly in the later English style, with a low massive tower: the west front, which is highly enriched, is ornamented with several statues of kings and abbots, including those of St. Guthlac and St. Bartholomew, and of King Ethelbald, the first of whom was interred in a small stone building near the abbey, probably his abode while leading the life of an anchorite, from which circumstance, perhaps, originated its modern names "Anchorage House" and "Anchor Church House." The interior contains an ancient font, divided into compartments, a cylindrical stoup, and some well executed screen-work; the roof is finely groined, and the windows are large, and decorated with elegant tracery. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Between the river Welland and the marshes is a causeway, on which, at the distance of two miles from the town, is St. Guthlac's pyramid; and in the neighbourhood are many stone crosses.

CROWLE (St. OSWALD), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of THORNE, W. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 35 miles (N. N. W.) from Lincoln, and 164 (N. by W.) from London; containing, with the chapelry of Eastoft and hamlet of Ealand, 2544 inhabitants. The town is situated at the north-western extremity of the Isle of Axholme, near the river Don, and within a mile of the Stainforth and Keadby canal, which passes it on the north. The weekly market has been discontinued; but, from March till the end of May, a market for sheep and cattle is held on alternate Mondays, and there are fairs on the last Monday in May, and November 22nd, for cattle, flax, and hemp. The county magistrates hold a petty-session for the division; and constables are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14. 10.; net income, £777; patron and incumbent, Rev. G. Egremont; impropiator, R. S. Johnson, Esq. The church is a very ancient structure, of which the original character is concealed by repeated alterations and repairs. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; and a school has an endowment in land, producing £42 per annum. In 1747, the body of a woman was found in an erect position in the peat moor, near the town, which appeared to have been there for several centuries.

CROWLE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of DROITWICH, partly in the Upper division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, but chiefly in the Middle division of that of OSWALDSLOW, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 5 miles (E.) from Worcester; containing 526 inhabitants. This place is situated in a district abounding with picturesque scenery; the approach from Worcester is by a beautiful range of hills, forming an amphitheatre, and commanding extensive prospects. The parish comprises 1690a. 2r. 25p., of which the soil is a strong rich clay: on the south side are extensive quarries of blue lias, which burns into excellent lime. The rivulet Bow skirts the parish on the east, and falls into the Avon near Pershore. About 100 persons are employed in the manufacture of gloves. The Worcester and Birmingham canal passes within a mile, and the Spetchley station of the Gloucester and Birmingham railroad is within two miles. Crowle Court, the interior of which shows it to have been a religious house, is a very ancient edifice, surrounded by a deep moat. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16; net income, £306; patron, Samuel Crane, Esq.; impropiator, Geo. Farley, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1806; the glebe consists of about 180 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. A parochial school is supported.

CROWLEY, a township, in the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH, union of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 6 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Northwich; containing 175 inhabitants.

CROWMARSH-BATTLE, a hamlet, in the parish of BENSINGTON, union of WALLINGFORD, hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD; containing 93 inhabitants.

CROWMARSH-GIFFORD (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union and parliamentary borough of WALLINGFORD, hundred of LANGTREE, county of OXFORD, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (E.) from Wallingford; containing 330 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 6. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £187; patrons, Trustees of Dr. Barrington, late Bishop of Durham. The church is a small Norman edifice, with two circular windows at the west end. A school is supported from the rates, and another partly by the rector. In the parish are some remains of ancient fortifications, supposed to have been raised by Stephen, either in 1139, when he besieged the Empress Matilda in Wallingford Castle, or in 1153, when he laid siege to that town.

CROWTHORPE (St. JAMES), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of FOREHOE, E. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (N. W. by W.) from Wymondham; containing 111 inhabitants. It comprises 685 acres, of which 462 are arable, 154 pasture, and 68 wood; the common land was inclosed in 1777. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 12. 6., and in the gift of Lord Wodehouse: the tithes have been commuted for £145, and the glebe contains 16 acres.

CROWTON, a township, in the parish of WEAVERHAM, union of NORTHWICH, Second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 5 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Northwich; containing 454 inhabitants.

CROXALL (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of TAMWORTH, partly in the N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD; and partly in the hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY, 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Tamworth; containing, with the township of Catton, in Derby, and that of Oakley, in Stafford, 258 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 3192 acres. The Birmingham and Derby Junction railway crosses the Thame and Trent near their junction in the parish, by a viaduct a quarter of a mile in length, supported on piles driven fifteen feet below the bed of those rivers, at an expense of £14,000. The living is a vicarage, endowed with part of the rectorial tithes, valued in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £489; impropiators of the remainder of the rectorial tithes, the family of Princeps. There is a school in union with the National Society.

CROXBY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, S. division of the wapentake of WALSHCROFT, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Caistor; containing 106 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road between Caistor and Louth, and comprises about 1500 acres; the soil is heathy on the hills, by which the surface is diversified, and there are some fine plantations. In the western portion of the parish is a large sheet of water, abounding with carp, tench, eels, and perch. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £310, and the glebe comprises 12 acres.

CROXDALE; a chapelry, in the parish of St. Oswald, DURHAM, union of DURHAM, S. division of EASINGTON ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Durham; containing 262 inhabitants. The manor came into the possession of the Salvin family prior to 1474, and has ever since continued in their hands. Here flows a small rivulet called Croxdale beck, the channel of which is a romantic dell of great depth and narrowness. A cross erected at this place gave name to the adjoining lands. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with the rectorial tithes; net income, £120; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Durham. The chapel, dedicated to the Holy Cross, is now a district church for parts of the parishes of St. Oswald and Merrington. There is a private Roman Catholic chapel at the Hall.

CROXDEN (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of UTTOXETER, S. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Cheadle; containing, with part of Calton chapelry, 293 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 2588 acres, of which 1638 are grass land, 480 arable, 270 woods and plantations, and 200 common. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income £92; patron, Earl of Macclesfield. Gervase, Lord Pierrepoint, in 1715, bequeathed a rent-charge of £5 for education; and there is a school in union with the National Society. Bertram de Verdun, in 1176, gave the monks of Aulney, in Normandy, a piece of land at Chotes, or Chotene (probably Cotton), to build a Cistercian abbey, which three years afterwards was removed to Croxden, where he and his family were buried; it was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and at the general Dissolution had an abbot and twelve religious, whose revenue was valued at £103. 6. 7. The remains of this once stately and sumptuous edifice exhibit good specimens of the early English style.

CROXTETH-PARK, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union and hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Prescot. The tithes have been commuted for £152, of which £147 are payable to the rector, and £5 to the vicar, of the parish of Walton-on-the-Hill.

CROXTON (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of CAXTON and ARRINGTON, hundred of LONGSTOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, 3½ miles (W. N. W.) from Caxton; containing 264 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Cambridge to Oxford, and its general appearance is flat; it comprises by computation 2000 acres, and the soil is clayey and cold, but produces good crops of wheat. Croxton Park contains 150 acres of land, with a handsome residence. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 8. 6½.; net income, £185; patron, Samuel Newton, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land in 1811; the glebe comprises 347 acres, including 310 given at the allotment, and there is a glebe-house. The church, the interior of which is elegantly fitted up, has been extensively repaired by the patron, who partly supports a school. Edward Leeds, founder of the celebrated Leeds family, was buried here: he was vice-chancellor of Cambridge university, and master of Clare Hall, about the year 1540.

CROXTON, a township, in the parish of MIDDLEWICH, union and hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 1 mile (N. N. W.) from Middlewich; containing 48 inhabitants. The Grand Trunk canal passes in the vicinity.

CROXTON (ST. JOHN THE EVANGELIST), a parish, in the union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, E. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (N. E. by E.) from Glandford-Brigg; containing 105 inhabitants. It comprises 1476a. 1r. 1p., of which about 1194 acres are arable, 179 meadow and pasture, and 103 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 14. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £358: the tithes were commuted for land in 1809. Upon a lofty eminence, about half a mile westward of the village, are the remains of a large intrenchment, called Yarborough Camp, supposed, from the discovery of coins, to be a Roman work.

CROXTON, a chapelry, in the parish of FULMDESTON, union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of GALLOW, W. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Fakenham; containing 68 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

CROXTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of THETFORD, hundred of GRIMSHOE, W. division of NOR-FOLK, 2 miles (N.) from Thetford; containing 330 inhabitants. There is an extensive rabbit warren. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £98; patrons and improPRIATORS, Master and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. The tithes were commuted for land in 1813; the glebe consists of 32 acres. The church is in the decorated style; the lower part of the tower is circular, and the upper part octagonal; the south aisle was removed more than half a century since. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CROXTON, a township, in the parish of ECCLESHALL, union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 3¾ miles (N. W. by W.) from Eccleshall; containing 887 inhabitants. Tithe rent-charges have been awarded, amounting to £371. 16. 3., of which £157. 9. 6. are payable to the prebendary of High Offley, and £212. 12. to the prebendary, and £1. 14. 9. to the vicar, of Eccleshall.

CROXTON-KEYRIAL (ST. JOHN), a parish, in the union of GRANTHAM, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 7 miles (S. W.) from Grant-ham; containing 650 inhabitants. It is the property of the Duke of Rutland, of whose mansion there are some remains, situated in a park in which races are celebrated at Easter. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 14. 7.; net income, £206; patron and improPRIATOR, Duke of Rutland: the tithes were commuted for land in 1766. The church is a very handsome structure, in the later English style, with a tower rising from the centre. William Smith, in 1711, bequeathed land, producing a rent of £11. 8., for which children are taught. W. Rymington left an estate, now worth £120 per annum, to the poor of this and three other parishes; G. Ashburne, a rent-charge of £15 to poor parishioners; and Anna Parnham, £300 for the poor, and £200 for the free school. Croxton Abbey was founded in 1162, by William Porcarius de Linus, for Præmonstratensian canons, whose revenue at the Dissolution was valued at £458. 19. 11.: one of the abbots was physician to King John, whose bowels were interred in the church.

CROXTON, SOUTH (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BARROW-UPON-SOAR, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 9¼ miles (N. E. by E.) from Leicester; containing 297 inhabitants. It comprises 1400 acres, of which about 400 are arable, and 10 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 3. 4.; net income, £130; patron, Duke of Rutland. There is a school in union with the National Society.

CROYDON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CAXTON and ARRINGTON, hundred of ARMINGFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, 6 miles (S. by E.) from Caxton; containing 441 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Royston to Huntingdon, and comprises by measurement 2711 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with part of the rectorial tithes, with the rectory of Clapton consolidated, and valued in the king's books at £7. 9. 7.; patron, and improPRIATOR of the remainder of the rectorial tithes, J. F. Gape, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for £531, and there is a glebe-house, with 10 acres of land. Some remains are visible of the mansion of the Downing family, many members of which were buried in a vault under the church. Sir George Downing, Bart., of Gamlingay, was the founder of Downing College, Cambridge, for which he left nearly 1800 acres of land in this parish.

CROYDON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the First division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, E. division of SURREY, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from London; containing, with part of Norwood, 16,712 inhabitants. This place, called by Camden Cradeden, and in ancient records Croindene and Croiden, derives its present name from Croie, chalk, and Dune, a hill, denoting its situation on the summit of an extensive basin of chalk. By some antiquaries it has been identified with the Noviomagus of Antonine; and the Roman road, from Arundel to London, which passed through that station, may still be traced on Broad Green, near the present town. At the time of the Conquest it was given to Lanfranc, Archbishop of Canterbury, whose successors had for several centuries a residence here, which is said to have been originally a royal palace. During the war between Henry III. and the barons, in 1264, the citizens of London, who had taken up arms against their sovereign, after having been driven from the field at Lewes, retreated to this town, where they endeavoured to make a stand; but part of the royal army, then stationed at Tonbridge, marched hither, and attacked and defeated them with great slaughter. The archiepiscopal palace, which, in 1278, was in its original state, built chiefly of timber, was enlarged by Archbishop Stafford, and subsequently improved by his successors in the see, of whom Archbishop Parker, in 1573, had the honour of entertaining Queen Elizabeth and her court for several days in this palace; which, having afterwards fallen into a state of dilapidation, was alienated from the see by act of parliament, and sold in 1780: the gardens have been converted into bleaching-grounds, the proprietor of which occupies the remains of the palace. With the produce of the sale, and other funds, was purchased, in 1807, for about £25,000, Addington Park, three miles and a half from Croydon, with a noble mansion, built by the late Alderman Trecothick, on the site of an ancient edifice said to have been a hunting-seat belonging to Henry VIII.: this mansion has been rebuilt by Dr. Howley, and is now the residence of the archbishops.

The parish is pleasantly situated on the border of Banstead Downs, and within its limits are two of the three sources of the river Wandle, a stream abounding with excellent trout. The town consists principally of one long street, and is paved, lighted with gas, and watched, under the direction of commissioners appointed by an act passed in the 10th of George IV., for its general improvement: the houses are mostly substantial and well built, and many of them are handsome and of modern erection; the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with water. In the vicinity are several mansions, with parks and pleasure-grounds, numerous detached residences, and ranges of neat dwellings, inhabited by highly respectable families; the salubrity of the air, and its convenient distance from the metropolis rendering this place a chosen retreat for merchants and retired tradesmen. There is a theatre; and a Literary and Scientific Institution was established in 1838. The barracks, which were erected in 1794, form a neat range of building, containing accommodation for three troops of cavalry, with an hospital, infirmary, and all the requisite stables, shops, &c. Within the distance of a mile east of the town is Addiscombe House, formerly the residence of the first Lord Liverpool, which, in 1809, was purchased by the Honourable the East India Company, for the establishment of their military college, previously formed at Woolwich Common, for the education of cadets for the engineers and artillery, but since 1825 open to the reception of cadets for the whole military service of the company, with the exception of the cavalry: there are generally from 120 to 150 students, and under the auspices of the court of directors, the establishment has obtained a rank equal to that of any military institution in the kingdom. The buildings which have been at various times added to the original mansion, for the completion of the college, have cost the proprietors more than £40,000.

The trade is principally in corn: the calico-printing and bleaching, which were formerly carried on extensively, have materially declined. A large brewery has been established more than a century; and there are others of more recent date. A railway for the conveyance of coal, lime, and other produce from the Thames at Wandsworth to Croydon, called the Surrey Iron railway, was commenced under an act obtained in 1801, authorising the company to raise a capital of £35,000, subsequently extended to £50,000, and afterwards to £60,000, for which it was completed and opened in 1805. The length of the line, including a branch of a mile and a half to Carshalton, is nine miles and a half; it is worked by horses. An act was obtained in 1803, for joining the Croydon railway with the Merstham and Godstone line, of which eight miles and a half only were completed, the company being unable to raise the whole of the capital of £30,000 granted by the act for its construction; another act was procured in 1806, for raising new shares, or a loan, but the work was not accomplished, and the company was dissolved in 1839, and the whole of the line as far as it extended, was purchased by the London and Brighton Railway Company. The London and Croydon railway, which was opened on June 5th, 1839, has its first station contiguous to that of the Greenwich railway, near London Bridge, and pursues the line of that railway for nearly a mile and a half of its course: it then diverges from it by a viaduct, and pursues its course to New Cross, Sydenham, Penge, and Norwood, and thence to this town. The Croydon station and depôt, formerly the premises of the canal company, which property was purchased for the formation of the railway along the bed of the original canal, is a spacious establishment, covering nearly five acres of ground. The whole cost of the line amounted, in 1840, to £615,160, averaging, for the expense of its construction, about £70,000 per mile. The Brighton line of railway turns off from the terminus at Croydon, and passes on the east side of the town, in a southerly direction towards Sussex. The market is on Saturday: fairs are held on July 6th for cattle, and Oct. 2nd for horses, cattle, sheep, and pigs; at the latter, which is also a large pleasure-fair, a great quantity of walnuts is sold. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, of whom those acting for the division hold a petty-session every Saturday; and a head constable, two petty constables, and two headboroughs, are appointed at the court leet, of the Archbishop of Canterbury, who is lord of the manor. There is a court of requests, for the recovery of debts under £5, every alternate week. The summer assizes for the county are held here and at Guildford alternately; and Croydon is the principal place of election for the eastern division of the county. The town-hall, a neat stone edifice, surmounted by a cupola, was erected in 1807, at an expense of £10,000, defrayed by the sale of waste lands belonging to the parish. The prison was erected by subscription among the inhabitants, on the site of the old town-hall, and is a large and substantial building, of which the lower part, containing several rooms, is used as the town gaol, and for the confinement of prisoners during the assizes, and the upper part let for warehouses. Near the town-hall is a convenient market-house for butter and poultry.

The parish comprises about 2000 acres, the larger portion of which is arable land. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £21. 18. 9., and in the patronage of the Archbishop; net income, £587; impropiator, A. Caldcleugh, Esq. The church, begun by Archbishop Courteney, and completed by Archbishop Chicheley, is a spacious and elegant structure of freestone and flint, in the later English style, having a lofty square embattled tower with crocketed pinnacles. In it are deposited the remains of Archbishops Grindall, Sheldon, Potter, and Herring, and there are some very fine monuments, of which that of Archbishop Sheldon, bearing his effigy in episcopal robes, exceeds all in the beauty of its workmanship: there are likewise some ancient brasses: its finely-painted windows were wantonly destroyed during the commonwealth. Two new churches have been lately erected, partly by a grant of £300 from Queen Anne's Bounty, and partly by a loan of £7000 from the Parliamentary Commissioners; one, on Croydon common, dedicated to St. James, is a handsome edifice, in the later English style, with a small campanile tower, and contains 1200 sittings, of which 400 are free; the other at Beulah Hill, Norwood, dedicated to All Saints', is in the same style, and contains 1005 sittings, of which 632 are free. The livings are perpetual curacies, in the patronage of the Vicar; net income of All Saints', £285; of St. James', £185. A chapel of ease, dedicated to St. John, was erected at Shirley, in 1836, containing 250 sittings, 170 of which are free. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans. The free school was founded and endowed in 1714, by Archbishop Tenison, and has an income of £130 per annum; schoolrooms were erected in 1792, at an expense of nearly £1000, on a piece of land adjoining the old school-house, which, having become unfit for the purpose, was let. The Society of Friends have a large establishment, removed to this place, in 1825, from Clerkenwell, where it had existed for more than a century, for the maintenance and education of 150 boys and girls. A free school, originally founded and endowed by Archbishop Whitgift, in conjunction with the hospital of the Holy Trinity, is now used as a national school; and there is another in union with that society; also a British school, at the north end of the town. A school of industry for girls is kept in the chapel belonging to the old archiepiscopal palace; and another at Croydon common, and a school at Shirley, are chiefly supported by subscription.

The hospital of the Holy Trinity was founded and endowed by Archbishop Whitgift, in 1596, for a warden, schoolmaster, chaplain, and any number above 30, and not exceeding 40, of poor brothers and sisters, not less than 60 years of age, of the parishes of Croydon and Lambeth, who were to be a body corporate and have a common seal; it is under the inspection of the Archbishop of Canterbury; the income, originally not more than £200, has increased to £2000 per annum, and there are 34 brothers and sisters now in the hospital. The building, occupying three sides of a quadrangle, in which is a small chapel, is a handsome specimen of the domestic style prevailing at the time of its erection. Davy's almshouses, for seven aged men and women, were founded, in 1447, by Elias Davy, citizen, London, who endowed them with land, now producing about £180 per annum: the premises were rebuilt about 70 years since. The Little Almshouses, containing originally nine rooms, were erected principally with money given by the Earl of Bristol, in consideration of land inclosed on Norwood common; they have been enlarged by the addition of fifteen apartments, at the expense of the parish, for the poor. In 1656, Archbishop Laud gave £300, which sum having been invested in the purchase of a farm and in the funds, produces £62 per annum, applied to the apprenticing of children. Henry Smith, Esq., of London, in 1627, left lands and houses yielding an income of £213, of which about £150 are distributed among the inmates of the Little Almshouses; and there are various other charitable bequests for the relief of the poor. The union of Croydon contains 11 parishes or places, and contains a population of 27,721. On a hill towards Addington is a cluster of 25 tumuli, one of which is 40 feet in diameter; they appear to have been opened, and, according to Salmon, to have contained urns. And on Thunderfield common is a circular encampment, including an area of two acres, surrounded by a double moat. At Duppas Hill, it is said, a tournament took place in 1186, when William, only son of John, the 7th Earl Warren, lost his life. In 1719, a gold coin of the Emperor Domitian was found at Whitehorse farm, in the parish, where also, within the last few years, a gold coin of Lælius Cæsar, in good preservation, and several others, were discovered; and in digging for a foundation in the town, in 1791, two gold coins of Valentinian, and a brass coin of Trajan, were found.

CROYLAND.—See CROWLAND.

CRUCKTON, a township, in the parish of PONTESNURY, union of ATCHAM, hundred of FORD, county of SALOP, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Shrewsbury; containing 155 inhabitants. A church, dedicated to St. Thomas, being a chapel of ease to the second portion of the rectory of Pontesbury, was built by subscription in 1840, at an expense of £900; it is in the early English style, and contains 280 sittings, of which 160 are free.

CRUDWELL (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of MALMESBURY, Malnesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS, 6 miles (E.) from Tetbury; containing, with the hamlets of Chedglow, Chelworth, Eastcourt, and Murcott, 681 inhabitants. It comprises 4782a. 2r. 3p., of which about 2266 acres are arable, 2314 pasture, and 128 wood. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 5. 2½; net income, £487; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Salisbury. The church is a large and handsome edifice, in the Norman style; on one side of the nave the columns are short and massive, and on the other lofty and light. A school is endowed with land worth £18 per annum, and is further supported by the rector. Near this place runs the old Fosse-way to Cirencester.

CRUMPSALL, a township, in the parish and union of MANCHESTER, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Manchester; containing 2745 inhabitants. This place comprises 649*a.* 1*r.* 27*p.*, nearly the whole of which is pasture land. "The village" comprehends the township of Crumpsall, with a portion of Cheetham and Higher Broughton, and is commonly known by the name of Cheetham Hill. An episcopal chapel, dedicated to St. Mark, was erected in 1794, at the expense of the Rev. Charles Ethelstone, grandfather to the present incumbent. In 1785, two cottages were erected for a school, and are now let for £22 per annum, £13 of which are paid in support of St. Mark's charity school. Humphrey Chetham, founder of Manchester College, or Blue-coat Hospital, was born here in 1580; and Crumpsall Hall was formerly the residence of the ancestors of the Duke of Norfolk's family.

CRUNDALE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of EAST ASHFORD, hundred of WYE, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 9 miles (S. W. by S.) from Canterbury; containing 278 inhabitants. It is partly bounded by the river Stour on the west, and comprises 1572*a.* 36*p.*, of which about 980 acres are arable, 180 pasture, 250 wood, and 150 rough downs. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 10. 10., and in the gift of Sir Edmund Filmer, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £371. 9. 6., and a rent-charge of £23. 10. is paid to an impropiator; the glebe consists of about 18 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The Rev. Richard Forster, in 1728, bequeathed a house and land, now producing £5. 16. per annum, which sum is paid to a national school, chiefly supported by subscription. At Crundale Green considerable remains of a Roman sepulchre were discovered in 1703, in which were several skeletons, urns, and other vessels, both of earthenware and glass, with some coins, &c., supposed to have existed in the second century.

CRUTCH, an extra-parochial district, in the Upper division of the hundred of HALFESHIRE, Droitwich and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 2 miles (N.) from Droitwich; containing 9 inhabitants.

CRUWYS-MORCHARD (HOLY CROSS), a parish, in the union of TIVERTON, hundred of WITHERIDGE, Cul-lompton and N. divisions of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Tiverton; containing 670 inhabitants. This place takes its name from the ancient family of Cruwys, whose seat, Morchard House, near the church, was originally built in 1199, and is now inhabited by their descendant, the Rev. G. S. Cruwys. The parish is situated on the new road from Tiverton to Barnstaple, and comprises by computation nearly 6000 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 11. 8.; patron and incumbent, Rev. G. S. Cruwys, whose tithes have been commuted for £524, and whose glebe comprises 150 acres, with a glebe-house. The church was struck by lightning in 1689, which rent the steeple and melted the bells; it contains a finely carved oak screen, and some ancient monuments to the Anerays, and one to the memory of the Rev. Edmund Granger. In the churchyard is the burial-ground of the Cruwys family, the area of which is bounded by fir trees, marking out the site of the old family chapel, destroyed by Cromwell's soldiers: large pieces of alabaster, fragments of broken monuments, have been dug up on the spot.

CRUX-EASTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of KINGSCLERE, hundred of PASTROW, Kingsclere and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 7 miles (S. S. W.) from Newbury; containing 102 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 994 acres, of which 696 are arable, and about 200 woodland: the road from Andover to Newbury passes through the village. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 12. 6.; net income, £180; patron, James Bagge, Esq.: there is a glebe-house, with about 23 acres of land. The church was repaired about a century since by casing the old walls. There is a chapel of ease, called New Chapel; and a school is supported by the Earl of Carnarvon. In the neighbourhood are remains of several encampments. Here was the celebrated grotto constructed by the nine daughters of Edward Lisle, Esq., and commemorated by Pope; it has been suffered to go to ruin, the shell only remaining.

CUBBERLEY (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of CHELTHENHAM, partly in the hundred of BRADLEY, but chiefly in that of RAPSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Cheltenham; containing 231 inhabitants. This place during the parliamentary war afforded an asylum for one night to Charles II., who, travelling in disguise after the battle of Worcester, slept at the parsonage-house the evening before he effected his escape. The parish, which is situated within a quarter of a mile of the new road from Cheltenham to Cirencester, comprises by measurement 3421 acres: stone of inferior quality is quarried. The principal source of the river Thames, called the Seven-Springs, is in the parish: the stream turns a mill within half a mile from the spot whence it issues. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10., and in the gift of Henry Elwes, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £470, and the glebe comprises $17\frac{1}{2}$ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church, said to have been rebuilt in 1330, by Sir Thomas de Berkeley, is a handsome structure in the decorated English style, and contains several ancient and interesting monuments; the statue of Sir Thomas is still remaining in a niche in the south aisle; against the north wall, under a recess, is the figure of a knight in bold relief; and there are also the effigies of a crusader, and of a lady in the dress of the fourteenth century. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

CUBBINGTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WARWICK, Kenilworth division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 5 miles (N. E. by E.) from Warwick; containing 830 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south, and partly on the east, by the river Leame, and intersected by the road from Warwick to Rugby, and comprises 1858 acres of rich and productive land. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 6. 8.; net income, £207; patron and impropiator, Lord Leigh. The church has been recently enlarged. A national school was established in 1821; and a bequest by John Glover, in 1762, of £250, for educating children, and one by Hannah Murcott, in 1775, of £100, for the establishment of a school, are applied towards its support.

CUBERT (St. CUTHBERT), a parish, in the union of ST. COLUMB MAJOR, W. division of the hundred of PYDER and of the county of CORNWALL, 10 miles (N. E.) from Truro; containing 368 inhabitants. It is situated on the shore of the Bristol Channel, and comprises by admeasurement 2440 acres: along the coast are several curious caverns, and a very large sand-bank, between 200 and 300 feet high; and there is a well, called Holy Well, on the beach, much resorted to for children diseased or weak in their limbs. A small cattle fair is held on the 3rd of June. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 6. 8., and in the gift of Charles Hosken, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £178, and the glebe consists of 20 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The remains of two encampments, supposed to be Danish, may be traced.

CUBLEY (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 6 miles (S. by W.) from Ashbourn; containing 425 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Marston-Montgomery annexed, valued in the king's books at £13. 16. 3., and in the gift of the Earl of Chesterfield: the tithes have been commuted for £380, and the glebe comprises 5¼ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. A school is supported by the landowner and the rector. A fair is held on November 30th.

CUBLINGTON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of AYLESBURY, hundred of COTTLESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 6½ miles (N. by E.) from Aylesbury; containing 290 inhabitants. It comprises 1200 acres, chiefly pasture land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 16. 3.; net income, £289; patrons, Rector and Fellows of Lincoln College, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1769.

CUBY (St. KEBY), a parish, in the union of TRURO, W. division of the hundred of POWDER, and of the county of CORNWALL, adjoining the town of Tregoney, and containing 161 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from St. Austell to St. Mawes, and is bounded by the river Fal; it comprises 2000 acres, all arable, except about 8 acres of coppice. The living is a vicarage, annexed to the rectory of Tregoney cum St. James, valued together in the king's books at £10. 4. 2. The church, with the exception of the porch and tower, was rebuilt in 1828; the interior is exceedingly neat, and contains a font curiously sculptured.

CUCKFIELD (HOLY TRINITY), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of BUTTINGHILL, rape of LEWES, E. division of SUSSEX, 25 miles (N. E. by E.) from Chichester, and 38 (S.) from London, on the road to Brighton; containing 3444 inhabitants. This place is situated on a pleasant eminence, nearly in the centre of the county: the pathways in the town are laid with bricks of a very firm and durable quality, formed of red clay, which is found within the distance of four miles, where also are strata of pipe-clay of peculiar whiteness: sandstone also is found in the parish. The London and Brighton railway, after being carried across the valley of the Ouse by a stately viaduct of 37 arches, passes within a mile and a half of the town, and for its further progress a bridge and embankments have been constructed at Vale Pool. The market is on Friday; and fairs are held on Whit-Thursday, and Sept. 16th, for horses and cattle. The county magistrates hold petty-sessions for the division on alternate Mondays; and the town is a polling-place for the eastern division of the county. Cuckfield Place is an ancient mansion, erected in the latter part of the sixteenth century. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £20. 14. 2.; net income, £414; patron, Bishop of Chichester; impropriators, the Landowners. The church is a large and handsome structure, in the decorated English style, with a square tower surmounted by a spire covered with shingles, which, from its elevated situation, has been frequently injured by lightning. There are places of worship for Independents and Unitarians. The free grammar school was founded in 1528, and endowed by Edward Fuller, Esq., of London, and the Rev. William Spencer, of Balcomb, with the manor of Redstone, in the parish of Reigate, and other estates; the income is £28 per annum. Lady Dorothy Shirley erected the house, which adjoins the churchyard; also a gallery in the church for the scholars. There is a school in union with the National Society, for the instruction of the children of the poor. The poor law union of Cuckfield comprises 15 parishes or places, and contains a population of 17,132.

CUCKLINGTON (St. LAWRENCE), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, E. division of SOMERSET, 2¾ miles (E. by S.) from Wincanton; containing 339 inhabitants. The manor anciently belonged to Henry de Ortiaco or L'Orti, to whom Edward I., in the 32nd of his reign, granted a market on Tuesday, and a fair on the eve, day, and morrow, of the festival of All Saints, and for seven successive days, both of which have been long discontinued. The living is a rectory, with that of Stoke-Trister united, valued in the king's books at £12. 19. 4½., and in the gift of William Phelips, Esq., lord of the manor: the tithes of the two parishes have been commuted for £594. 6., and the glebe comprises 99¼ acres.

CUCKNEY, or NORTON-CUCKNEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WORKSOP, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 5½ miles (S. S. W.) from Worksop; containing 1697 inhabitants, of whom 625 are in the township of Norton-Cuckney. The parish is watered by the river Poulter, and comprises 5284a. 3r. 21p., of good land, all inclosed, and consisting of extensive pastures and some plantations: the township contains 1095 acres. The village is of considerable extent, and there are some worsted and cotton mills, which give employment to a large number of children from the Foundling Hospital, in London. There is also a mill for polishing marble. A market and a fair were formerly held, but both have been long discontinued. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 8. 6½.; patron, Earl Mauvers; impropriators, Duke of Portland and others. The great tithes have been commuted for £726. 18., and the vicarial for £212. 5.; the glebe contains 19 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a large ancient structure with a handsome tower, and was thoroughly repaired and repewed in 1831. A school is supported by subscription.

CUDDESSEN (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of HEADINGTON, hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from OXFORD; containing, with the chapelries of Denton and Wheatley, and the hamlet of Chippinghurst, 1483 inhabitants, of whom 305 are in the township of Cuddesden. This place has been for many years distinguished as one of the episcopal residences of the bishops of Oxford. According to Wood's *Athene, a palace was built here in 1635, by Bishop Bancroft, at an expense of £3500, exclusively of a large grant of timber from Shotover Forest by Charles I.; and this edifice was burnt down by Colonel Legge, in 1644, from an apprehension that it might be converted into a garrison by the parliamentarians, and was rebuilt in 1679, by Bishop Fell. The living consists of a vicarage and rectory, annexed to the bishopric, and valued in the king's books at £17. 0. 5.: the great tithes have been commuted for £315, and the glebe contains nearly 30 acres. The church is a spacious and handsome cruciform structure, chiefly Norman, with some later portions; the west entrance to the nave is a fine specimen of the Norman style, and the arch under the tower is highly enriched with zig-zag mouldings and other details; there are some interesting monuments to Bishop Bancroft, who was interred near the south wall of the chancel, and to Bishops Moss and Jackson. A school is partly supported by the Bishop of Oxford.

CUDDINGTON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union and hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Aylesbury; containing 626 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Teme, by which it is bounded on the north-west, and according to computation comprises 1240 acres, whereof the greater portion is arable, and the remainder excellent pasture land: stone of good quality for building is extensively quarried. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Haddenham: the appropriate tithes have been commuted for £275, and the vicarial for £180; the appropriate glebe consists of nearly 18 acres, and the vicarial of 14 acres. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists.

CUDDINGTON, a township, in the parish of MALPAS, union of WREXHAM, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Malpas; containing 240 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £163.

CUDDINGTON, a township, in the parish of WERVERHAM, union of NORTHWICH, Second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Northwich; containing 253 inhabitants. A school for girls is supported by subscription.

CUDDINGTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of EPSOM, Second division of the hundred of COPTHORNE and EFFINGHAM, W. division of SURREY, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. N. E.) from Ewell; containing 158 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 12. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$.: the tithes have been commuted for £381. 15. The church has been demolished. The celebrated palace called Nonsuch, built by Henry VIII., was situated in the parish.—See EWELL.

CUDHAM (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of BROMLEY, hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 7 miles (S. E.

by S.) from Bromley; containing 776 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 500 acres, whereof the soil is in general poor, and abounds with large flints; it contains many extensive woods, the most considerable of which is that called Cudham-Lodge Wood. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 2. 2., and has a net income of £190; the patronage and impropriation belong to the Crown. A grant for a weekly market to be held here, was made by Henry III.

CUDWORTH (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of CHARD, hundred of SOUTH PETHERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Ilminster; containing 155 inhabitants. It comprises 436 acres of arable land, 520 pasture, and 98 wood; the prevailing timber is elm and Scottish fir; the surface is rather hilly, and the soil rests upon chalk; limestone is quarried. The Creech and Chard canal passes within two miles. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Cudworth, in the Cathedral of Wells, who is also impropriator; net income, £63: the great tithes have been commuted for £200, and the glebe contains 32 acres. The church is in the later English style.

CUDWORTH, a township, in the parish of ROYSTON, wapentake of STAINCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Barnsley; containing 552 inhabitants. Mention of this place first occurs in the chartularies of Nostal and Bretton, both which monastic establishments possessed lands here; and among the families that have been connected with the spot as landed proprietors, occur those of Stapleton and Jobson, which were of considerable note. Lands, too, here and in some neighbouring manors, were included in the endowment of the Savoy Hospital, founded by Henry VII. The township comprises by computation 1680 acres of land, and contains the villages of Upper and Lower Cudworth. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school was endowed with a bequest from William Poppleton, in 1747, of £50 for the erection of a schoolroom, and £300 to support the master. There are some small benefactions for the poor.

CUERDALE, a township, in the parish and Lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, union of PRESTON, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Preston; containing 106 inhabitants. It lies near the river Ribble.

CUERDEN, a township, in the parish and hundred of LEYLAND, union of CHORLEY, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Chorley; containing 573 inhabitants. Petty-sessions for the division are held on Monday, once in five weeks. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £55, and the impropriate for £29. 12. 4. A school is endowed with land, of the annual value of £6, and is further supported by £7 a year from Lostock Hall estate, and £5 from Crooke's bequest.

CUERDLEY, a township, in the parish of PRESCOT, union of WARRINGTON, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Warrington; containing 221 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £128, payable to King's College, Cambridge, and the vicarial for £81. 11. 6. There is a school, endowed with a house and a quarter of an acre of land.

CUGLEY, a tything, in the parish and union of NEWENT, hundred of BOTLOE, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 8 miles (W. N. W.) from Gloucester; containing 490 inhabitants.

CULBONE, or KILNER (St. CULBONE), a parish, in the union of WILLITON, hundred of CARHAMPTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Porlock; containing 34 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the north by the Bristol Channel, and exhibits the most romantic scenery, comprises by computation 1502 acres: the village, from the steepness of the surrounding hills, was, until within the last few years, scarcely approachable, except on foot. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 18. 11½, and in the gift of the Earl of Lovelace: the tithes have been commuted for £35, and the glebe comprises 32 acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

CULCHETH, a township, in the parish of WINWICK, union of LEIGH, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 5½ miles (E.) from Newton-in-Mackerfield; containing 2193 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £415, of which £345 are payable to the impropiator, and £70 to the rector. In 1727, Henry Johnson bequeathed £612. 6. for educating children; and there are also two small bequests of £10 each, made in 1691 and 1702.

CULFORD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of THINGOE, hundred of BLACKBOURN, W. division of SUFFOLK, 4¾ miles (N. N. W.) from Bury-St. Edmunds; containing 352 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Lark, which is here navigable for small craft from Lynn to Bury, and comprises by computation 2209 acres; the surface is undulated, and the scenery diversified; the soil is generally light and sandy, but clay is found in some parts, and also a strong earth, well adapted for making white bricks. Culford Hall, the seat of R. B. De Beauvoir, Esq., lord of the manor, is an elegant mansion, situated in a spacious park. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with those of Timworth and Ingham, valued in the king's books at £8. Two schools are supported by Mr. De Beauvoir and the rector. Lord Cornwallis, who for his brilliant achievements as commander-in-chief in India, was created a marquess in 1792, and to whom, after his death, the parliament voted a monument in St. Paul's Cathedral, was born here.

CULGAITH, a chapelry, in the parish of KIRKLAND, union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 7 miles (E.) of Penrith; containing 361 inhabitants. It comprises 2697a. 2r. 26p., the whole arable, except 150 acres of woodland. From the Crowdulle quarries is raised red freestone of excellent quality for building, of which blocks of immense size are obtained for pillars and other uses. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £75; patron, Vicar of Kirkland; impropiator, Rev. R. Rice. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints. A school is endowed with land.

CULHAM (St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of ABINGDON, hundred of DORCHESTER, county of OXFORD, 1 mile (S. S. E.) from Abingdon; containing 404 inhabitants. This place, which is nearly surrounded by the river Isis, was formerly the occasional retreat of the abbots of Abingdon, and in the ancient manor-house, now occupied as a farm-house, is a room still called the Abbot's chamber. The living is a vicarage not in charge; net income, £100; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Oxford. Here are two schools supported by subscription.

CULLERCOATS, a township, in the parish and union of TYNEMOUTH, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of the county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Tynemouth; containing 738 inhabitants. This place is a small sea-port, artificially constructed, inhabited chiefly by fishermen, and remarkable for being, perhaps, the smallest township and manor in England, not extending further than the village and a plot of adjoining ground, and the whole of the land, exclusive of that covered by houses, not exceeding seven acres; it is a mesne manor, the property of the Rev. Mr. Huddleston, and is included in the parliamentary borough of Tynemouth. In the bathing season the village is much frequented, the beach being firm sand, and suitable accommodation being afforded by lodging-houses for visitors. A school is supported by subscription, and the building is used on Sundays as a place of worship by dissenters: there is a small burial-ground belonging to the Society of Friends.

CULLINGWORTH, a hamlet, in the township of BINGLEY cum MICKLETHWAITE, parish of BINGLEY, union of KEIGHLEY, Upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, 7 miles (N. W.) from Bradford. The lands have been inclosed, and afford good crops of corn and excellent pasturage: stone, also, is quarried for building. The village is pleasantly situated on an eminence commanding fine views of the vale below, and is chiefly inhabited by persons employed in the worsted-spinning and Heald yarn manufacture, for which there are large mills, established in 1810, by Messrs. George Townend and Brothers. Near Cold-spring House, the seat of William Craven, Esq., is a remarkably fine spring of water. There are places of worship for Baptists, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists; and a school is endowed with £10 per annum, under the inclosure act. At Spring-head is a Roman encampment.

CULLOMPTON (St. ANDREW), a market-town and parish, in the union of TIVERTON, hundred of HAYRIDGE, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 12 miles (N. E. by N.) from Exeter, and 166 (W. by S.) from London; containing 3909 inhabitants. This place, which derives its name from its situation on the river Culme, or Columb, was held in royal demesne during the heptarchy; and a collegiate church was founded here, at a very early period, by one of the Saxon monarchs, which was annexed by William the Conqueror to the abbey of Battle, in Sussex. In 1278 the inhabitants obtained the grant of a market from Edward I., which was confirmed by his successor in 1317, with the addition of an annual fair. The town is pleasantly situated in an extensive vale, surrounded by a large tract of level country, and consists of one principal street, roughly paved, from which some smaller streets diverge; the inhabitants are amply supplied with water, and the environs abound with pleasant walks. It suffered severely by an alarming fire that broke out July 8th, 1839, from the roof of a thatched tenement on the western side of the main street; 132 houses and cottages were reduced to ashes, including the whole of New-street. The chief articles of manufacture are broad and narrow woollen-cloth, kerseymere, and serge, which afford employment to several hundred persons: on a stream between the river and the town are two flour-mills, a paper-mill, and a mill for spinning yarn; and there are other manufacturing establishments, and also four tanneries. The Bristol and Exeter railway passes through the place. The market is on Saturday; the fairs are on the first Wednesdays in May and November, which are large marts for bullocks and sheep. The county magistrates hold a petty-session here monthly for the division. Three high constables are chosen for the hundred, of whom one acts for this and the adjoining parish of Kentisbeare; and six petty constables are annually appointed by the parishioners, three for the town, and three for the rest of the parish.

The parish comprises about 9000 acres; the surface is greatly diversified with hill and dale, and the lower lands are subject to occasional inundation from the river Columb; the soil comprehends almost every variety. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £47. 4. 2.; net income, £351; patron, R. B. De Beauvoir, Esq.; improPRIATORS, Proprietors of estates. The church is an elegant and spacious structure, in the later English style, with a lofty square tower, strengthened by highly enriched buttresses, and crowned with pierced battlements and crocketed pinnacles: opening into the south aisle is a beautiful chapel, erected in 1528, in the richest style of that period, by Mr. John Lane, whose remains are deposited in it: the roofs of the nave and aisle of the church are of oak, finely carved and decorated with gilding. There are places of worship for Baptists, Bryanites, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians; also a national school. A fund of nearly £70 per annum, arising from land bought with a donation from George Spicer, Esq., in 1624, is appropriated to the apprenticing of children; and £54. 10. per annum, arising from land purchased with a donation from John and Henry Hill, Esqrs., are given in clothing to aged men. There are also several other charitable benefactions, by means of which £100 are annually distributed among the poor. At Langford-Barton are the remains of an ancient chapel.

CULM-DAVEY, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of HEMYOCK, union of WELLINGTON, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON. Here is a chapel of ease to the rectory of Hemyock.

CULMINGTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of LUDLOW, hundred of MUNSLOW, S. division of SALOP, 5½ miles (N. by W.) from Ludlow; containing 541 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 3500 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 9. 2.; net income, £605; patron and incumbent, Rev. W. Johnstone. A school is supported by B. Hounders, Esq.

CULMSTOCK (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WELLINGTON, hundred of HEMYOCK, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 7 miles (N. E.) from Cullompton; containing 1446 inhabitants, of whom several are employed in the woollen manufacture. Fairs for cattle are held on the 21st of May, and on the Wednesday after the 29th of September. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, the appropriators, and valued in the king's books at £16: the great tithes have been commuted for £320, and the vicarial for £355; the glebe contains 4¼ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church contains a handsome stone screen, with a doorway enriched and canopied with foliage, and was enlarged in 1824. There are meeting-houses for Baptists, the Society of Friends, and Wesleyans. A school is partly supported by the vicar, and partly by subscription; and another is in union with the National Society.

CULPHO (ST. BOTOLPH), a parish, in the union of WOODBRIDGE, hundred of CARLFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3½ miles (W. by N.) from Woodbridge; containing 70 inhabitants. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £5. 7. 11.; net income, £55; patron and improPRIATOR, T. T. Gurdon, Esq., whose tithes have been commuted for £15.

CULVERLANDS, a tything, in the parish, union (under Gilbert's Act), and hundred of FARNHAM, W. division of SURREY, 1½ mile (S. S. E.) from Farnham; containing, with Tilford, 509 inhabitants.

CULVERLEY, an extra-parochial district, adjacent to the parish and liberty of DIBDEN, union of NEW FOREST, Southampton and Southern divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 46 inhabitants.

CULVERTHORPE, a chapelry, in the parish of HAYDON, union of SLEAFORD, wapentake of ASWARDHURN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Sleaford; containing 139 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Bartholomew.

CULWORTH (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRACKLEY, hundred of KING'S SUTTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 7¾ miles (N. E.) from Banbury; containing 713 inhabitants. It is situated near the borders of Oxfordshire, and comprises 2214 acres of a rich and productive soil. The living consists of a rectory and vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the gift of S. Spence, Esq.: the rectorial tithes have been commuted for £509, and the vicarial for £191; the rectorial glebe contains nearly 24 acres, and there is a glebe-house. A school-house, built by Mrs. Danvers, was endowed, in 1795, with an annuity of £65, by Martha and Frances Rich; it is in union with the National Society.

CUMBERLAND, the extreme north-western county of England, occupying a maritime situation, bounded on the east by Northumberland and Durham; on the south-east by Westmorland and Lancashire, from the former of which it is partly separated by Ulswater and the river Eamont, and from the latter by the river Duddon; on the west by the Irish Sea; and on the north by Scotland, from which it is divided by the Solway Firth and the rivers Sark, Liddell, and Kershope. It extends from 54° 12' to 55° 10' (N. Lat.) and from 2° 19' to 3° 37' (W. Lon.), and contains 1478 square miles, or 945,920 statute acres: within its limits are 34,574 inhabited houses, 2386 uninhabited, and 200 in the course of erection; the population amounts to 178,038, of whom 86,292 are males, and 91,746 females.

This county, in Saxon orthography Cumbra-land, signifying "the land of the Cumbrians," derives its name from having been occupied, after the settlement of the Saxons in Britain, by a remnant of the ancient Britons; styled Cumbri, or Cymry: it was also designated Caer- leyl-schire, or Caerlielleshire, from its chief town Caerleyl, now Carlisle. At the time of the Roman invasion, it was, according to Whitaker, inhabited by the Volantii, or Voluntii, a "people of the forests," and the Sis-tuntii, tribes of the Brigantes, whose territory was not subjugated by the Romans until the reign of the Emperor Vespasian. In the division of the island by the victorious Romans, Cumberland was chiefly included in the great province of Maxima Caesariensis, which was separated from that of Valentia by the fortified wall crossing the northern part of the county. During the heptarchy it formed part of the kingdom of Northumbria, composed of the two smaller states of Bernicia and Deira. About the middle of the tenth century, it was ceded to the Scots, together with the greater part of Bernicia; and from that period it was sometimes under the dominion of their monarchs, and sometimes under that of the English sovereigns, till the year 1237, when it was finally annexed to the crown of England by Henry III. Its border situation has caused it to be the subject of many remarkable transactions, and the scene of numerous interesting historical events; and even after the Scottish dominion over the northern counties of England had finally ceased, the feuds between the two kingdoms raged with unabated violence for more than three centuries, during which this county was seldom long exempted from the horrors of invasion, or the cruelties and depredations of border warfare. Life and property could only be preserved by a most vigilant system of watch and ward, and the construction of numerous fortresses: almost every gentleman's residence, particularly on the sea-side, or near the border, had its fortified tower, sufficiently capacious to afford refuge to the inhabitants of the domain; and in some parishes the church towers were so constructed as to serve for this object. The border service and laws were instituted in the reign of Edward I.; the former for the purpose of keeping a strict watch, establishing beacons, and regulating the musters in time of war; and the latter for the punishment of private rapine and murders committed by individuals of either nation on those of the other, in time of peace. A Lord Warden of the Marches, whose authority was partly civil and partly military, was appointed on each side of the borders; the first English Lord Warden having been nominated in 1296. The English borders were divided into three districts, called Marches, namely, the Eastern, Middle, and Western, Cumberland being included in the last. The wardens held courts, but offenders were frequently executed without trial. The union of the two kingdoms, under James VI. of Scotland and I. of England, having put an end to the devastating inroads and sanguinary retaliations which defile the border annals, that monarch took active measures for ensuring the peace of that harassed district; and to abolish as much as possible the distinction between the two kingdoms, he ordered that the counties of England and Scotland which had been called the Borders should be styled the Middle Shires, and thus described them in his proclamation. He soon after banished the Græmes, or Grahams, a numerous clan, occupying what was called "the debateable ground," near the river Esk, who had long been an annoyance both to their own countrymen and the inhabitants of Cumberland. Notwithstanding these precautionary measures, outrages and robberies continued to be perpetrated on the borders for some time after James' accession to the English throne, which caused him to issue several special commissions, under which various beneficial regulations were adopted. All persons, "saving noblemen and gentlemen unsuspected of felony or theft, and not being broken clans," in the counties lately called the Borders, were forbidden to wear any armour, or weapons offensive or defensive, or to keep any horse above the value of 50s., on pain of imprisonment. Slough-dogs, or blood-hounds, for pursuing the offenders through the mosses, sloughs, or bogs (who thus acquired the name of moss-troopers), were ordered to be kept at the charge of the inhabitants of certain districts; and the laws were enforced against them with the utmost severity: nevertheless, they were not finally extirpated until the reign of Queen Anne.

Cumberland is chiefly in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, in which it comprises the deaneries of Carlisle, Penrith, and Wigton; but the ward of Allerdale above Derwent is in the deanery of Copeland, archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester; and the parish of Alston-Moor is in the diocese of Durham: the entire county is in the province of York, and contains 104 parishes. By the act of the 6th and 7th of William IV., cap. 77, it is proposed to place the county wholly in the diocese of Carlisle. For purposes of civil jurisdiction it is divided into five wards (a term peculiar to the border counties), respectively denominated Allerdale above Derwent, Allerdale below Derwent, Cumberland, Eskdale, and Leath. It comprises the city and inland port of Carlisle; the ancient borough and market-town of Cocker-mouth; the sea-port, market-town, and newly-enfranchised borough of Whitehaven; the market and sea-port towns of Maryport, Ravensglass, and Workington; the small but thriving sea-port of Harrington; and the market-towns of Alston-Moor, Aspatria, Bootle, Brampton, Egremont, Hesketh-Newmarket, Keswick, Kirk-Oswald, Longtown, Penrith, and Wigton. By the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the county sends four representatives to parliament, and for that purpose is divided into two portions, called the Eastern and Western divisions, the former composed of the wards of Cumberland, Eskdale, and Leath; and the latter of those of Allerdale above and below Derwent. Carlisle and Cocker-mouth each return two members; and Whitehaven, by the late act, is invested with the privilege of sending one. Cumberland is included in the Northern Circuit: the assizes and the Easter and Midsummer quarter-sessions are held at Carlisle, where stands the common gaol and house of correction; the Epiphany sessions, at Cocker-mouth; and the Michaelmas sessions, at Penrith.

The SURFACE of the county is beautifully diversified with level plains and swelling eminences, deep sequestered vales and lofty mountains, open heathy commons and irregular inclosures, in some parts richly decorated with tufted groves and thriving plantations, and the whole enlivened with almost innumerable streams and extensive lakes. The mountainous and the level districts form its marked natural divisions: the latter occupy chiefly the northern and western parts, and though well cultivated and fertile, do not afford any interesting scenery, except along the courses of the several rivers: the mountainous lands, between which and the plains there are generally lower ranges of smooth hills, commonly denominated fells, may be divided into two extensive districts, equally incapable of agricultural improvement, but differing considerably in character. The entire eastern and north-eastern sides of the county, bordering on Durham and Northumberland, form the highest part of the mountainous chain that runs through the centre of the island from Staffordshire to Linlithgow, and are chiefly comprised under the designations of Cross Fell, Hartside Fell, Geltsdale Forest, and Spadeadam Waste, amongst which, Cross Fell rises pre-eminently to the height of 2902 feet, and, though steep on its western side, has a very gentle declivity eastward. These mountains, to the south-east, are separated by the level tracts bordering on the rivers Eden, Eamont, Petterill, and Caldew, from those occupying the southern part of the county, which are among the most elevated in Britain, and present a great variety of grand and picturesque forms, their sides being steep and rugged, and in some places ornamented with woods; while the deep vales, mostly rich and in a high state of cultivation, and in many parts well wooded, contain, in numerous instances, lakes of considerable extent; the whole forming some of the most romantic and picturesque scenery in the kingdom, deservedly eulogized in the descriptive tours of several ingenious writers, and comprehending a pleasing variety of subjects for the most successful efforts of the pencil.

The most valuable of the MINERALS are coal and lead; in addition to which the county produces the singular mineral substance called wad, or black-lead, slate, copper, iron, and lapis calaminaris. The coal district is supposed to occupy an extent of about 100 square miles: the principal collieries on the coast are at Whitehaven and Workington, which supply by far the chief portion of the coal imported into Ireland. The singular species called "cannel coal" is procured in different parts, particularly in the parishes of Caldbeck and Bolton. The most important lead-mines are those at Alston-Moor, which were discovered and first worked by Francis, first Earl of Derwentwater; and on the attainder of the third earl, were, together with the manor and his other estates, forfeited to the crown, and appropriated to the endowment of Greenwich Hospital. The ore contains a proportion of silver, averaging from eight to ten oz. per ton: copper-ore has sometimes been found in the same vein with the lead, and this metal was formerly exported from the county in large quantities, being likewise found at Caldbeck, Melmerby, and Hesketh: it is also in the lead-mines that the lapis calaminaris is found. Iron-ore of a rich quality is procured in the mines of Whitehaven, and exported to the works in South Wales: there are iron-mines at Crowgarth, in the parish of Cleator, and at Bigrigg, in that of Egremont; and on the sea-shore, near Harrington, iron-stone is collected, and a few hundred tons annually sent to Ulverstone. The celebrated mine of "wad," or black-lead, at the head of Borrowdale, is described in the account of that place. The limestone near the sea-coast is burned in great quantities for exportation, particularly at Overend, near Hensingham, and at Distington, from each of which places about 350,000 bushels are annually sent to Scotland. At Allhallows, Brigham, Cleator, Hodbarrow-in-Millom, Ireby, Plumbland, Sebergham, Uldale, &c., are lime-works for inland consumption; and the barony of Gilsland is supplied from the parishes of Castle-

Carrock, Denton, and Farlam. The gypsum, or alabaster, is more especially abundant in the parishes of Wetheral, St. Cuthbert (Carlisle), and St. Bees, on the sea-coast, about a mile from Whitehaven, whence 500 or 600 tons are annually exported to Dublin, Glasgow, and Liverpool, where it is principally used in the composition of stucco. Of the freestones, which abound and are worked in most parts of the county, there are two quarries producing some of an excellent quality, both red and white, in the neighbourhood of Whitehaven, whence much of their produce is shipped for Ireland, Scotland, and the Isle of Man. At Negill and Barn-gill, near the same port, are export quarries of grindstones; and in the townships of Bassenthwaite, Borrowdale, Buttermere, Cockermouth, and Ulpha, are quarries of excellent blue slate; that obtained in Borrowdale is of the best quality. Numerous mineral substances of minor importance, and a great variety of spars and metallic fossils, are likewise found; and divers extraneous fossils, also, are discovered imbedded in the limestone strata in several places.

The Manufactures are various. That of calico and gingham, at present the principal, was first established at Dalston, and soon extended to Carlisle and Penrith, at all which places there are large cotton-works: the printing of cotton, which is nearly of equal magnitude, is carried on at Carlisle, and has been the means of greatly increasing the population. At Cleator, Egremont, and Whitehaven, sail-cloth is manufactured; and at Keswick, coarse woollen cloths and blankets. Coarse earthenware is made at Dearham and Whitehaven, and bottles at the Ginns, near that town; and there are iron-foundries at Carlisle, Dalston, and Seaton, near Workington; paper-mills at Cockermouth, Egremont, and Kirk-Oswald; and several yards for ship-building at Maryport, Whitehaven, and Workington, besides every kind of manufacture necessary for the shipping. The fisheries, too, are of some importance: there are herring fisheries at Allonby, Maryport, and Whitehaven, the last on a very extensive scale; and a great quantity of cod is taken on this coast. In the Esk, Eden, and Derwent are valuable salmon fisheries, the produce of which is sent from Carlisle and Bowness to London, to which place the char taken in the lakes is also forwarded, after being potted at Keswick. The pearls, still occasionally found in the muscles of the Irt, were once highly esteemed. The two principal Rivers are the Eden and the Derwent, the former of which, after being augmented in different parts of its course by the Eamont, Irthing, Caldew, and Petterill, empties itself into the Solway Firth, and in its lower reaches was made navigable up to Carlisle bridge, to which the tide ascends, a distance of somewhat more than ten miles, under the authority of an act of the 8th of George I.; but the passage was so much impeded by shoals as to render it a very imperfect line of navigation, and its use is now almost wholly superseded by that of the Carlisle canal, which was constructed under an act obtained in 1819; and, commencing at Carlisle, communicates with the Solway Firth at Fisher's Cross, near Bowness. There are also the Esk, the Liddell, the Levon or Line, and a vast number of smaller streams. The Newcastle and Carlisle railway was begun under the authority of an act obtained in 1829, and opened June 18th, 1838; it extends for sixty-one miles from the canal basin at Carlisle to Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and was commenced with a capital of £400,000, subsequently augmented to £950,000. The Maryport and Carlisle railway, for the conveyance of coal is 28 miles in length, extending from the harbour of Maryport, and connecting it with the Newcastle railway at Carlisle; the original capital was £180,000, since augmented to £240,000.

The REMAINS of distant ages are numerous and interesting. There is even a considerable number of the rude memorials of the aboriginal inhabitants, the largest and most complete of which is the circle of stones vulgarly called "Long Meg and her Daughters," in the parish of Addingham. About a mile and a half south-east of Keswick is a smaller circle, having an oblong inclosure on the east side; another, named the "Grey Yawd," is in the parish of Cumwhitton, and a third, at a place designated Swin-side, near Millom, with part of another near it; and kistvaens, and rude weapons and tools of the ancient British inhabitants, have been found in various places, especially in the south-western part of the county, near the sea-coast. Cumberland is thought to have contained several British cities, of which Carlisle is enumerated by Richard of Cirencester as one; and it was formerly crossed by a great trackway, probably of British construction, that extended from the banks of the Eamont through Carlisle, nearly in the line of the present turnpike-road. The "Maiden-way," from Kirby-Thore to Bewcastle, which seems to have been another British road, may still be traced across the moors in the eastern and north-eastern extremities of the county, in its course into Scotland. The celebrated ROMAN WALL, constructed by the Emperor Severus, nearly in the line of a vallum of earth previously raised by Adrian, to check the incursions of the northern barbarians, crossed the northern portion of the county, and may yet be traced in different parts of its course, particularly near Burdoswald, Lanercost priory, and within about a mile of its termination on the shore of the Solway Firth. Of the stations that were placed along the line of this barrier, the first that occurs in following its course westward from the border of Northumberland is that at Burdoswald, which, from the numerous inscriptions and other relics, appears to have been the one called in the Notitia Amboglana, occupied by the Cohors Prima Ælia Dacorum, and the remains of which evince its former extent and importance. The next is at Castlesteads, or Cambeck-Fort, six miles and a quarter further, which is supposed to have been the Petriana of the Notitia; three miles beyond is Watchcross, conjectured to have been the Roman Aballaba; the next was that of Congaveta, at Stanwix, just opposite Carlisle; at Burgh-on-the-Sands, about four miles and a half further, was the station Axelodunum, on the site of which urns, altars, and inscriptions have frequently been found; at Drumburgh are evident remains of another station, probably Gabrocentum; and the last remains of the wall point to a spot supposed to be the site of the station Tunnoceum, the last on this line of defence. Of the stationes per lineam valli, placed so as to afford support to the garrisons of those on the wall, Cumberland contained six, whereof that of Ellenborough, the name of which is doubtful, was one of the most important: on its site, the greatest number of Roman antiquities has been found. At Papcastle, near Cockermouth, was another, supposed to have been called Derventio; at Old Carlisle was one more considerable, of which there are extensive remains, as also of that at Old Penrith, or Plumpton-wall, the Voreda of Antonine and Richard of Cirencester; at Moresby was one, thought to have been Arbeia; and the sixth was the station Bremetenracum, the site of which has not been ascertained. There are likewise remains of two advanced stations on the north side of the wall, one at Bewcastle, and the other at Netherby, on the Esk. Carlisle was the Luguballium of the Romans; and, from the great number of military stations, no county in England, except Northumberland, has produced so many Roman altars and inscribed stones as Cumberland, besides a profusion of miscellaneous Roman antiquities.

The principal Roman road across the county, which has been designated "the larger road of Severus," ran nearly parallel with the wall, a little to the south of it, and is yet visible from Willowford across the Irthing to Walbours, a little beyond which place, after being for some distance very conspicuous, all trace of it is lost for some miles until near Watchcross, where it re-appears, but is soon after finally lost. Both the British trackways above mentioned were subsequently important Roman roads, especially the first, which passed by the stations at Plumpton-wall and Carlisle, and crossed the Roman wall at Stanwix, whence it proceeded by Longtown and Solway Moss into Dumfries-shire: from Longtown a branch diverges north-eastward, towards the station at Netherby, and thence to a Roman post at the junction of the Esk and Liddell, and onward to that of Castle-Over, in Dumfries-shire. No fewer than three Roman roads diverged from the station at Ellenborough, one along the coast towards Bowness, another to Papcastle, and the third north-eastward to the station at Old Carlisle, which it passed to the left, proceeding in a direct line towards Carlisle cathedral. A Roman road that connected the stations at Ambleside and Plumpton-wall, is still visible in various places, especially near the Whitbarrow camp, which was a post of some consequence between the two Roman towns: at this point terminates a road from the station at Brougham, in Westmorland. Another Roman road, formed of pebbles and freestone, extends from the parish of Egremont through those of Cleator, Arlochden, and Lamplugh, towards Cockermouth.

Prior to the Reformation, there were eleven Religious Houses, besides two collegiate establishments and two hospitals, within the limits of the county: of these, there yet remain the churches of the monasteries of St. Bees, Carlisle (now the cathedral), and Lanercost, part of that of Holme-Cultram, and various ruined buildings of Calder Abbey, the priories of St. Bees, Carlisle, and Wetheral, and the nunnery of Seaton. The remains of the abbey church of Holme-Cultram, and of Lanercost priory, exhibit specimens of the earliest English architecture, having the pointed arch united with the massive Norman pillar; those of Seaton nunnery have lancet-shaped windows and slender pillars. The ancient castles, owing to the border-situation, are remarkably numerous; but most of them are now either in ruins or in a state of considerable dilapidation. Independently of these, few of the ancient mansions present any remarkable feature, except the large square tower of three or four stories attached to most of them, intended to afford refuge for the family on any sudden predatory inroad of the Scots.

The most remarkable Mineral water is the sulphureous spring at Gilsland, celebrated for the cure of cutaneous disorders, and long resorted to on account of its valuable properties: besides a considerable portion of sulphur, its waters contain a small quantity of sea salt, and a slight admixture of earthy particles. There is also a strong sulphureous spring in the township of Biglands, in the parish of Aikton; and a saline spring at Stanger, two miles north of Lorton, which nearly resembles the Cheltenham water, turning white on the infusion of spirit of hartshorn, and precipitating particles, chiefly saline, on the application of oil of tartar. There are likewise many other mineral springs, but their properties have not been accurately ascertained. Cumberland gives the title of Duke to the King of Hanover, fifth son of King George III., who was created Earl of Armagh, and Duke of Cumberland and Tiviotdale, in the year 1799.

CUMBERWORTH (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Alford; containing 183 inhabitants, and comprising 1228*a.* 31*p.* The living is a discharged rectory, united in 1733 to the rectory of Anderby, and valued in the king's books at £10. 10. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$.; patrons, Master and Fellows of Magdalen College, Cambridge. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1819; the glebe comprises 215 acres. The church was rebuilt at the expense of the incumbent, the Rev. John Lodge, and opened for divine service in 1839; it is a handsome structure, in the decorated English style. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is partly supported by the rector.

CUMBERWORTH, a chapelry, partly in the parish of HIGH HOYLAND, and partly in that of SILKSTONE, wapentake of STAINCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 8 miles (W.) from Barnsley; containing 1867 inhabitants. This chapelry, which is divided into Upper and Lower, comprises 2360 acres, principally the property of T. Wentworth Beaumont, Esq: the population is chiefly agricultural, but partly employed in the woollen and fancy manufactures. The villages of Upper and Lower Cumberworth are both of considerable antiquity, and in the former is the chapel of St. Nicholas, an ancient building situated on a high hill. The living is a donative, in the patronage of Mr. Beaumont. The tithes, which were commuted for 40 acres of land, in 1800, at the inclosure of the commons, formerly belonged to the ancestors of the patron, the Wentworths, of Bretton Park, who were lords of the manor, and obtained a grant of the donative in consideration of their endowing the living with the tithes of the township; they afterwards augmented the benefice by inclosing 34 acres of land from the waste. In Upper Cumberworth is a capacious building used as a day and Sunday school; there is a house for the master.

CUMBERWORTH-HALF, a township, partly in the parish of EMLEY, Lower division of AGRIGG wapentake, and partly in the parish of KIRK-BURTON, union of HUDDERSFIELD, Upper division of AGRIGG wapentake, W. riding of YORK; containing 1480 inhabitants. The township includes part of the hamlets of Skelmathorpe and Scissett, and comprises by computation 800 acres.

CUMDEVOCK, a township, in the parish of DALSTON, union of CARLISLE, CUMBERLAND ward, and E. division of the county of CUMBERLAND, 6 miles (S. S. W.) from Carlisle; containing 361 inhabitants.

CUMMERSDALE, a township, in the parish of St. MARY, liberty and union of CARLISLE, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Carlisle; containing 620 inhabitants.

CUMNER (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of ABINGDON, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS; comprising the tythings of Bradley, Chawley, Henwood, Hillend, Stroud, Swinford, and Whitley, the liberty of Chilswell, and the township of Cumner; and containing 1058 inhabitants, of whom 608 are in the township of Cumner, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Abingdon. This was anciently one of the appendages to the abbey of Abingdon, whose abbots had a residence here called Cumner Hall, now in ruins, which is noted as the place of the murder of the Countess of Leicester, by the direction of her husband, the favourite of Queen Elizabeth; and many of the scenes of Sir Walter Scott's Kenilworth are connected with this locality. The parish comprises 6637*a.* 2*r.* 38*p.*; the surface is very elevated, and the greater portion consists of the hills of Cumner and Wytham, which have an elevation of nearly 300 feet above the level of the river Thames, which bounds the parish for nearly three miles; the soil is various, in some parts clayey, in others sandy, alternated with stone brash. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £24. 17., and in the gift of the Earl of Abingdon: the tithes were commuted for land and money payments, in 1795 and 1814. The church is an ancient structure, containing some interesting monuments, among which are those of two abbots of Abingdon, and a monument to Anthony Foster, a retainer of the Earl of Leicester, by whom the Countess was murdered. A mineral spring here was formerly much frequented for its reputed virtues, but is now disused.

CUMREW, a parish, in the union of BRAMPTON, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 7 miles (S. by E.) from Brampton; comprising the townships of Cumrew Inside and Outside, the former containing 112, and the latter 71, inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the east by the river Gelt, and comprises 2694*a.* 2*r.* 10*p.*, of which about 950 acres are arable, and the rest, with the exception of 30 acres of wood, high moorland pasture inclosed about 35 years ago; the soil on the level grounds is a good loamy earth, and in the western district, which is mountainous, there is good limestone. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £81; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The tithes have been commuted for £89. 13. 4., and the glebe comprises 17 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres. There are several cairns, one of which, Carduneth, on the summit of a hill, is of immense size; and near the river are the ruins of a large castle, formerly belonging to the Dacres.

CUMWHINTON, a township, in the parish of WETHERAL, union of CARLISLE, CUMBERLAND ward, E. division of the county of CUMBERLAND, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Carlisle; containing 339 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CUMWHITTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRAMPTON, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND; comprising the townships of Cumwhitton, Moorthwaite, and Northsceugh; and containing 533 inhabitants, of whom 242 are in the township of Cumwhitton, 9 miles (E. S. E.) from Carlisle. The parish comprises 5400*a.* 2*r.* 29*p.*, the whole of which is arable, with the exception of about 140 acres of meadow, the ground occupied by a few Scottish firs and larches, and the plantations on the banks of the Eden. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £102; patron, incumbent, and impropiator, Rev. W. Ford. The church is in the Norman style, and consists of a nave, chancel, and north aisle; the ancient lancet windows have been displaced for others of larger dimensions; a tower was built in 1810. A school on the national plan has been established. On an eminence called "King Harry" is a Druidical temple, the stones of which, 90 in number, are placed in a circular position; and the lines of ancient intrenchments may be traced on the common.

CUNDALL (St. MARY AND ALL SAINTS), a parish, comprising the townships of Cundall with Leckby, and Norton-le-Clay, in the wapentake of HALLIKELD, and the township of Fawdington in that of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK; and containing 387 inhabitants, of whom 188 are in Cundall with Leckby, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Boroughbridge. The parish is on the banks of the river Swale, and comprises by computation 3480 acres, of which the soil is gravelly; the scenery is pleasingly diversified with wood and water. The hamlet of Cundall is on the western side of the river, and about five miles distant from the Sessay station of the Great North of England railway. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £3. 6. 8., and in the patronage of W. Heathcote, Esq., the impropiator, and has a net income, recently augmented to £96: the church is an old and dilapidated building, fast falling into ruins. A small chapel of ease was erected in 1839, by subscription, at Norton-le-Clay. A school, on the national plan, is supported by the proceeds of the parish poor lands, by subscription, and a small endowment.

CUNSALL, a township, in the parish of CHEDDLETON, union of CHEADLE, N. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Cheadle; containing 190 inhabitants. Two schools are supported by Mr. Leigh.

CUNSCOUGH, a district, in the parish of HALSALL, union of ORMSKIRK, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Ormskirk; containing, with Melling, 607 inhabitants.

CUPERNHAM, a tything, in that part of the parish of ROMSEY styled ROMSEY EXTRA, union of ROMSEY, hundred of KING'S-SOMBOURN, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 1 mile (N. E.) from Romsey.

CURBAR, a township, in the parish and union of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. by S.) from Stoney-Middleton; containing 412 inhabitants. It is situated on the eastern bank of the river Derwent.

CURBOROUGH, with ELMHURST, a township, in the parish of ST. CHAD, LICHFIELD, union of LICHFIELD, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (N. N. E.) from Lichfield; containing 227 inhabitants. A school is supported by subscription.

CURBRIDGE, a hamlet, in the parish and union of WITNEY, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Witney; containing 387 inhabitants. The hamlet comprises 2907 acres, of which 1941 are arable and 955 pasture. The tithes have been commuted for £685, and there is a glebe of 124 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres. There are six almshouses, endowed with £110 per annum.

CURDRIDGE, a tything, in the parish and hundred of BISHOP'S-WALTHAM, union of DROXFORD, Droxford and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 397 inhabitants.

CURDWORTH (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of ASTON, Birmingham division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 8 miles (N. E. by E.) from Birmingham; containing 693 inhabitants. The parish, which includes the hamlet of Minworth, is bounded on the south by the river Tame, and intersected by the road from Birmingham to Tamworth, and the old road from Coventry to Lichfield; it comprises by computation 3170 acres, of which 1620 are in the township of Curdworth, and 1550 in Minworth, into which the parish is divided by a portion of Sutton-Coldfield, which intervenes between them. The surface of the land is generally level, and the soil chiefly suited to the growth of turnips and barley; around the village and towards the river are rich meadow and pasture grounds. The Birmingham and Fazeley canal passes through the parish, and the Birmingham and Derby Junction railway proceeds, for about half a mile, through Minworth. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of the Rev. W. Wakefield, the present incumbent, and others, with a net income of £289; impropiators, Rev. W. Wakefield and C. B. Adderley, Esq. The tithes (with the exception of those for the manor of Dunton, about 500 acres, which still pays great and small tithes to the Vicar of Curdworth) were commuted for land under an inclosure act passed in the year 1791. The church is an ancient structure, in the later English style, with a square tower; a noble Saxon arch separates the chancel from the body of the edifice: the well-known Dr. Sacheverel was married in this church. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans, and at Minworth is one for Independents. A battle was fought here between the parliamentarians and Charles I.

CURLAND (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of TAUNTON, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET, 5 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Taunton; containing 228 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the rectory of Curry-Mallet: the tithes have been commuted for £84, and the glebe contains 12 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a school for girls, endowed by Mrs. Anne Shepherd.

CURRY, EAST, a tything, in the parish of ST. GREGORY, union of TAUNTON, hundred of NORTH CURRY, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 686 inhabitants.

CURRY-LOAD, a tything, in the parish of ST. GREGORY, union of TAUNTON, hundred of NORTH CURRY, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 184 inhabitants.

CURRY-MALLET (ALL SAINTS), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of LANGPORT, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET, 6 miles (N. N. W.) from Ilminster; containing 630 inhabitants. The manor, in the time of Edward II., belonged to Hugh Poyntz, to whom that monarch granted a weekly market, and a fair on the eve, day, and morrow of the festival of All Saints; and who, in the 18th of that reign, was summoned to parliament by the title of Lord Poyntz, baron of Curry-Mallet. In the second year of Edward III. this place was annexed to the duchy of Cornwall, by the same act of parliament which vested the duchy in the eldest son of the king, and it has ever since continued to form a part of it. The parish abounds with lias stone, which is extensively quarried for lime, and also for building; and the Chard canal passes through the place. The living is a rectory, with that of Curland annexed, valued in the king's books at £24. 1. 3., and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Cornwall; net income, £392. The church is a handsome structure, in the later English style.

CURRY, NORTH (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of TAUNTON, hundred of NORTH CURRY, W. division of SOMERSET, 7 miles (E. by N.) from Taunton; comprising the tythings of North Curry, Knapp, Lillesdon, and Wrantage; and containing 2028 inhabitants, of whom 950 are in the tything of North Curry. This place appears to have been not unknown to the Romans, an urn containing a quantity of silver coins of that people having been discovered in 1748: it was subsequently held by the Saxon kings, and retained in demesne by the Conqueror. King John granted it a market, which was formerly held on Wednesday, but has been long discontinued. The parish comprises by admeasurement 5500 acres, of which about 1600 are arable, 90 woodland, and the rest pasture; the navigable river Tone passes in the vicinity. Newport, in the parish, anciently possessed the privileges and officers of a corporate town, and is still called a borough: it had also a chapel. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of West Hatch annexed, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Wells, valued in the king's books at £21; impropiator, C. Holcombe Dare, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £650, and the vicarial for £220; the glebe consists of $2\frac{1}{2}$ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Wesleyans.

CURRY-RIVELL (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of LANGPORT, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from Langport; comprising the tythings of Hambridge and Portfield, and part of those of Burton-Pynsent and Week, the hamlet of Langport-Westover, and Westmoor, an extra-parochial place; and containing 1660 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Parret, and is intersected by the road from Barnstaple to London; it comprises 4001 acres by measurement, and contains several quarries of blue limestone and white lias, in which bivalve shells of different sorts are frequently found. Fairs for cattle and sheep are held on the last Wednesday in February, the Monday next after Lammas, and the 5th of August. The living is a vicarage, with Weston, endowed with the rectorial tithes of the latter, and valued in the king's books at £13. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$.; patron and impropiator, W. Speke, Esq. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £310, and the rectorial for £200; the glebe comprises only the site and gardens of the ancient vicarage-house. The church is an old edifice, in the early English style. A school is supported by subscription. The mansion of Burton-Pynsent, once the property and residence of the celebrated Earl of Chatham, who enjoyed the title of Viscount Pitt, of Burton-Pynsent, has been taken down.

CURY (St. Ninian), a parish, in the union of HELSTON, W. division of KERRIER hundred and of CORNWALL, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Helston; containing 541 inhabitants. It is situated on the shore of Mount's bay. The living is a vicarage, annexed, with those of Germoe and Gunwalloe, to the vicarage of Breage: the great tithes have been commuted for £279, and the vicarial for £190. The church has a fine Norman arch over the south door. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school is supported by subscription. In a field on the estate of Trevessec was discovered, a few years since, an earthen vessel containing several hundred copper coins of various Roman emperors.

CUSOP (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of HAY, hundred of EWYASLACY, county of HEREFORD, 2 miles (E. S. E.) from Hay; containing 223 inhabitants. On the west and south the parish is bounded by a portion of Wales, the river Wye separating it in the former, and the river Dulas in the latter, direction: it comprises 2294 acres, and is intersected by the road from Hereford to Hay. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 19. 7., and in the gift of the Earl of Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £210.

CUSTHORPE, a hamlet, in the parish of WEST-ACRE, union and hundred of FREEBRIDGE-LYNN, S. division of the hundred of GRENHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Swaffham. Here are the ruins of a chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, and supposed to have been founded by the monks of West-Acre priory, who received permission to hold a fair on the 7th of July: connected with it was a house, the residence of a custos and one or two monks, who were engaged in serving the chapel.

CUTCOMBE (St. John), a parish, in the union of WILLITON, hundred of CARHAMPTON, W. division of SOMERSET, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Dunster, on the road from Minehead to Exeter; containing 843 inhabitants. The surface is strikingly diversified, rising in some parts into hills of mountainous elevation; and on the summit of Dunkery, one of the highest mountains in the western counties, and 1696 feet above the level of the sea, are the remains of several large hearths belonging to the beacons formerly erected on this elevated spot to alarm the country in times of civil discord or foreign invasion. Limestone is extensively quarried for building and burning into lime; and iron-ore, which is wrought in the adjoining parish, is supposed to exist here. Fairs are held at Wheddon Cross, on the 22nd; and at Luckwall Bridge on the 29th, of September. The living is a vicarage, endowed with part of the rectorial tithes, with that of Luxborough annexed, and valued in the king's books at £14. 0. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$.; it is in the patronage of the Crown. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £114. 14. 6., and the vicarial for £295; the glebe comprises about $1\frac{1}{2}$ acre. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A parochial school has an endowment of £35 per annum, arising from a bequest of Richard Elsworth, in 1729; and commodious school-rooms, with a residence for the master and mistress, have been erected.

CUTSDEAN, a chapelry, in the parish of BREDON, union of WINCHCOMB, Upper division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Blockley and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 7 miles (W. by S.) from Moreton-in-the-Marsh; containing 172 inhabitants. It forms a detached portion of the parish, entirely surrounded by the county of Gloucester. A schoolmistress receives £7. 16. per annum, left by a member of the Tracey family.

CUTTHORPE, a hamlet, in the parish of BRAMPTON, union of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY; containing 333 inhabitants.

CUXHAM (HOLY ROAD), a parish, in the union of HENLEY, hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Tetsworth; containing 222 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 10. 5.; net income, £275; patrons, Warden and Fellows of Merton College, Oxford. The tithes have been commuted for £182; there is a good glebe-house, and the glebe contains nearly 24½ acres.

CUXTON (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of NORTH AYLESFORD, hundred of SHAMWELL, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Rochester; containing 376 inhabitants. This parish comprises 1500 acres: the river Medway, which has a wharf here, passes within a quarter of a mile. The chalk pits in the neighbourhood supply the material for lime, and bricks are made to a limited extent. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 15. 5., and in the gift of the Bishop of Rochester: the tithes payable to the incumbent have been commuted for £380. 16., with a glebe of 28½ acres; a rent-charge of £32. 1. is paid to an impropiator, and one of £43. 5. to the Dean and Chapter of Rochester.

CUXWOLD (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (E.) from Caistor; containing 62 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 7. 6., and in the gift of H. Thorold, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £314. 17. 8., and the glebe comprises one acre and a quarter.

CWMCARVAN, a parish, in the union of MONMOUTH, division of TRELICK, hundred of RAGLAN, county of MONMOUTH, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Monmouth; containing 315 inhabitants. The parish occupies a position in the eastern part of the county, and contains 2908 acres, of which 939 are arable, 1498 pasture and meadow, and 394 woodland, the remainder consisting of roads and wastes: the surface exhibits considerable varieties of elevation, some parts being boldly undulated, and others tolerably level; and from Cwmcarvan hill the views are extensive and pleasing. A battle was fought here between Henry V. and Owen Glyndwr, in which the latter was defeated. The living is annexed to the rectory of Mitchel-Troy: a rent-charge of £193 has been awarded as a commutation for the tithes, of which sum £20 are payable to the Bishop of Llandaff; and there is a glebe of 10 acres, with a small house. The church is an ancient structure, containing a pulpit elaborately carved.

CWMYROY (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of ABERGAVENNY, partly in the hundred of EWYASLACY, county of HEREFORD, and partly in the division and hundred of ABERGAVENNY, county of MONMOUTH, 8 miles (N. by W.) from Abergavenny; containing, with the hamlets of Bwlch-Trewyn and Toothog, 718 inhabitants, of whom 219 are in Hereford, and 499 in Monmouth. Soon after the year 1108, a priory, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and afterwards known by the name of Llanthony Abbey, was founded here by Hugh Lacy, for canons regular of the order of St. Augustine, many of whom, by reason of the privations and hardships which they sustained in this place, removed, first to the episcopal palace at Hereford, and afterwards, in 1136, to Hyde, near Gloucester, leaving a few of their brethren at the original settlement at Llanthony, whose revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was estimated at about £100. The parish is about eight miles in length, and one mile in breadth, forming a rich and fertile valley, inclosed on both sides by lofty hills, which extend from one extremity of the parish to the other, and watered by a rivulet called the Honddu, along the bank of which is the road to Abergavenny: nearly in the centre of this picturesque vale are the ruins of Llanthony Abbey, consisting of the gateway, and part of the conventual building. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £68; patron, R. Powell, Esq.; impropiator, W. S. Landor, Esq. The chapel of Llanthony, a plain edifice, is situated close to the beautiful ruins of the abbey. There are places of worship for Welsh Methodists and Baptists; and a school is supported by subscription. At the extreme part of the Black mountain is a fine specimen of a Roman encampment.
